End of Congress Counted on for Saturday Next

Unemployment Relief and Governmental Economy Final Hurdles Before Adjournment.

Washington.—Turning down the road to adjournment, congressional pilots pushed Sunday toward the last steep hills—unemployment relief and governmental economy.

On one part of the program, that providing for a 300 million dollar emergency fund for relief loans to states, the president and the senate were agreed, but the house has withheld action on it.

Administration republicans were prepared to offer Monday an amendment to strike out this section. There was also a fight in prospect over the other section of the democratic bill, authorizing a $1,500,000,000 increase in the borrowing power of the reconstruction corporation for loans on self-liquidating construction.

Leaders were hopeful of an early settlement of the economy issue. The conference report on the national economy bill was before the house for consideration of the disagreement over federal pay cuts.

Borah Balks on Both Hoover and Party Platform

Says Flatly That He Will Not Support the President—Dry Plank Attacked.

Washington.—Senator Borah, the man generally credited with doing as much as any one person to elect Herbert Hoover in 1928, announced Monday he would not support the president for re-election on the platform adopted by the party convention.

Borah's decision, which had been impatiently awaited by republican chieftains, was given to a senate which crowded tensely around him to hear his reaction to the prohibition plank adopted by the party at Chicago.

A few minutes later, when asked pointblank if he would support President Hoover on the Chicago platform, Borah replied in three words: "I will not."

They sent a thrill thru the chamber, crowded with senators who remembered Borah's efforts four years ago, and into the thickly occupied galleries.

Charges Political Expediency. Borah declared the prohibition plank was adopted for "political expediency" by a convention overwhelmingly in favor of outright repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

His declaration was quickly imparted to President Hoover, but the only white house statement was this, from Theodore Joslin, one of the president's secretaries: "There is no comment to be made here on that subject."

The chief executive was informed, however, of the contents of the Idahoan's address. Telephone calls from the capitol were received at the white house concerning it while Borah was still speaking, and were relayed to the president.

Senator Hastings, Delaware, a member of the resolutions committee which drafted the prohibition plank, defended it, contending the convention had "definitely and positively" placed itself on record against repeal.

Says Platform Inadequate.

"It is clear to me, Borah said, "that the republican campaign will not be fought around, or upon the singular document which came from that convention. Long before the strenuous October days arrive the realities of the campaign, the persistent questioning of the voters, the increasing demands of the situation, will cause this platform to be shoved aside as wholly inadequate and wholly unresponsive to the necessities and demands of the people."

Turning to the dry plank, Borah said: "It is clear that a great majority of the members of the convention were for repeal of the eighteenth amendment, naked repeal. It is perfectly clear and just to say," he added, "that those who voted for the plank as it was adopted, as it finally became a part of the platform, did so to a large extent as sheer political expediency."

Secretary Mills, were "openly and uncompromisingly for repeal."

SHORT SELLERS HARD HIT

Senator Fess of Ohio, who retired last week as chairman of the republican national committee, challenged this statement, saying Brown was opposed to repeal, but Borah insisted upon his point.

"If the convention expressed the view of the republican party," Borah said, "the party is for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, and just as soon as the platform will have disappeared, and the party in my judgment will stand unalterably for the repeal of the amendment."
