

Roosevelt and Garner Nominees of Democrats

Dramatic Scene as McAdoo Evens His Score with Smith and Beaks Almost Certain Deadlock

OTHER CANDIDATES WITHDRAW

Candidate Flies to Chicago to Attend Closing Session of Convention This Afternoon.

The predictions of many of the opponents of Governor Roosevelt that his candidacy for the presidency of the democratic ticket had been stopped, were swept aside at the Friday night session of the national convention.

With the fourth ballot under way, the tall commanding figure of William Gibbs McAdoo, of California, on the platform to make an announcement, dramatically brought to the close the contest, the change of the California vote pointing the way.

The final result of the ballot gave Roosevelt 945 of the 1,148 votes, Smith receiving 190, with scattered votes for other candidates.

It seemed about to become unanimous when Governor Ritchie, himself a candidate, stood on his chair in the Maryland delegation and cast the state's vote for Roosevelt.

Militant to the last, Massachusetts shouted its vote for Smith as the Bay State delegates stood up and waved their state standard as they cheered.

When Ohio was reached the delegation chairman announced that Governor White had released the delegates and they were caucusing to decide how to vote. Oklahoma, which had come to Chicago pledged to Governor Murray, joined the Roosevelt parade, voting solidly for him.

At 10:24 p. m. hardly more than an hour after the session had begun, Chairman Walsh read the result of the ballot and to the accompaniment of a deafening thunderclap of applause pronounced Roosevelt the nominee of the party.

The Roosevelt celebrators started another parade around the hall, but Walsh gavelled them down and presented former Senator Reed of Missouri.

The silver-haired Missourian told the convention that "our cheers here cannot elect a candidate in November."

"It requires something else," he said. "It requires earnest, patriotic work from this hour to the moment when the last ballot is cast and counted."

"At a time like this every man who claims to be a democrat should hang from his heart all feeling of disappointment and chagrin, and, like a good soldier, salute the colors and face the enemy. I want to thank my friends for their support, but above everything now I summon the democracy of Missouri to the standard."

Pronounced the Nominee.
When Chairman Walsh formally pronounced Roosevelt "the nominee of this convention," a last brief spasm of enthusiasm swept the convention floor. But no attempt was made for a long demonstration, and time was given over for former Senator Reed to rally the party stalwarts.

It was Alfred E. Smith, the man whom he obtained "the happy warrior" in nominating him for the presidency at Houston in 1928, who persuaded Roosevelt to stand for the New York governorship four years ago. While Smith lost the state to Hoover in the presidential contest, Roosevelt won handsomely for the state chair and lifted his majority on re-election two years later.

Aged fifty, he comes from a distinguished line. That temperate republican president, "Teddy" Roosevelt, was his fifth cousin, and when a Harvard student early in the century "F. D." as some intimates call the nominee, used to visit with "T. R." at the white house.

His political career opened in the New York legislature and carried him to the vice presidential nomination in 1920. He was assistant secretary of the navy in the war days when his rival to be in November, Herbert Hoover, was also in Washington directing the food administration.

Roosevelt started working toward his latest honor more than a year ago, gradually perfecting an organization in all sections of the country that won for him the commanding lead in delegate strength that he had when this convention opened.

The Smith Opposition.

Months before now Smith started out against him. There has been much speculation as to the cause of a break between the two. Smith had been personally active for days past to get the nomination for himself.

At the outset last week, members in the Roosevelt organization undertook to combat the century old tradition of the party on the two-thirds rule. The governor called off the attempt, however, and the contest was dropped after splits developed especially in Roosevelt states from the south, making the possible outcome look extremely close.

Smith and others against Roosevelt stood by the two-thirds rule, and also carried the campaign that put the prohibition repeal plank across by a four to one vote.

The convention wildly applauded when the message was read by Chairman Walsh from the candidate for president, stating that he would address the convention in person on Saturday afternoon, reaching Chicago at 1:30 Saturday afternoon.

With the adjournment of the convention the sentiment for John Nance Garner of Texas, for vice-president was growing and receiving the friendly backing of the Roosevelt forces.

START ECONOMY IN COURTS

Omaha.—The provisions of the federal economy act, effective Thursday, were relayed from Washington to Val Peter, United States marshal here, and he was instructed to apply the cuts immediately in the Nebraska federal judicial district.

The provision that all court messengers are to be "furloughed indefinitely," will mean that two men will be furloughed. They are Anton Gross, Omaha, messenger to Judge Woodrough here, and Clay Van Kirk, messenger to Judge Munger at Lincoln.

The fees of petit and grand jurors are reduced from $4 to $3 daily but the five cent mileage allowance is continued. Fees of government witnesses are reduced from $2 to $1.50 and the $2 a day allowance for subsistence is dropped altogether. The five cent a mile traveling fee continues.

Bailiffs are reduced from $5 to $4.50 a day and judges will be limited to $6 a day instead of $10, for actual expenses of subsistence. No authority will be granted for the incurrence of expenses of travel and subsistence for stenographers to circuit judges and district judges until further notice, the instructions said.

FREDNOT RIVER NAVIGATION

Omaha.—Local advocates of Missouri river waterway development, upon their return from Kansas City Tuesday, were enthusiastic over prospects of having the river navigable as far north as Omaha within the next few years.

The group Monday participated at Kansas City in the celebration marking resumption of Missouri river steamboat traffic after a lapse of seventy years. "In four years we will have such a celebration here," predicted Rufus E. Lee, chairman of the waterways committee of the Omaha chamber of commerce.

Working on Membership

With the changing of the rates on the assessment of the Modern Woodmen, which made it prohibitive for the older members to remain in the order, a number of the younger ones became offended on account of the shabby way the older ones were being treated and many of them dropped out as well. Joseph Hayes, from the headquarters, was a visitor to Manley on last Thursday, making an effort to secure new members, but was not getting very far.

Everybody Working Now

The demand for farm labor has pressed into service all the men in this vicinity not heretofore employed and for the time there is plenty of work for everybody. Uncle Joseph Matena, who is past the working age, and Joseph Wolpert, who has other things to look after are the only persons not employed at this time. This speaks well for the hustling town of Manley. By the way, do you recall that Manley was one of few towns in Cass county not asking for a portion of the Red Cross flour milled from the farm head's surplus wheat. The other towns are Murdock and Myrand.

Making Change in Road Work

The state highway patrol, which has been located at Murdock since its inception was during the middle of this week changed to Manley. The large auto patrol machine which was received recently will be kept at Manley and worked out of here both ways. A slight change in the doors of the patrol house had to be made in order that the machine could be gotten into the house. John Eppinger, who has charge of the work for the state, will remain in Murdock for the present, as there is no house in Manley which can be secured for a living place. This speaks very good for Manley that there is no empty house in the town.

While she is some better, still her condition is very grave.

His furlough was set to expire on July 5th, but he has been making an effort to secure an extension of the time. Shortly before coming home he met up with Arthur Muckenbaum, who recently joined the navy from this vicinity and found him in fine spirits and liking the service very well.

WATERS TAKES BOLD STAND

Washington.—After a week of internal discussion which sent its make almost to the point of disintegration, the bonus seekers' army was under a virtual dictatorship.

Walter W. Waters of Portland, Ore., was both acclaimed and directed to vote new commander of the veterans' army with unlimited powers. It was the third time he had held that post.

In announcing his program, he said he would immediately institute a two hour drill daily, remove all officers established by other regiments and cut any officer or camp commander who declined to co-operate with him now. Some 10,000 men at the Anacostia encampment cheered him when he announced that he expected to conduct his office this time in a "hard-boiled way." Meanwhile, Senator Blaine told the senate that "one of the most ravaging epidemics this country has ever experienced" may result from failure to provide adequate rations for the bonus marchers encamped here.

GARNER FOR RUNNING MATE

Washington.—A belief that Speaker Garner will be Franklin D. Roosevelt's running mate if the New York governor wins the presidential nomination spread among house democratic members. The speaker himself maintained his strict silence on all subjects relating to his candidacy, whether for first or second place. But a number of the Texan's friends and supporters were firm in their predictions of a possible Roosevelt-Garner ticket. These friends felt that Garner's refusal to "make trades" in the convention fight did not indicate opposition to Roosevelt, but rather a determination not to attempt "delivery" of his ninety Texas and California delegates to any candidate.
