adds: . "No one knows this better than the forlorn republican bosses. Something tells them they are in for a mean November. The old bold front is gone and they are almost humble. Behold them in California, the ebullient Governor Rolph, the glowering Senator Johnson, and the fearful Senator Shortridge, spreading germs of disquiet and apprehension.

And he quotes a republican worker

"The machine gave me a dime-a-dozen job running around the state looking for soft spots -places where the republican organization is paralyzed and anti-Hoover sentiment is strong. Now that's out. The organization doesn't want the truth; it wants to be kidded. All I found was soft spots. The idea was to do something about those soft spots-soak them up. But they were so soft you couldn't even mop them up. So I went back and told the organization the truth and got canned. Know what they told me? They said: "'Listen, you mug, we didn't hire you to dig up the bad news. We can get that for nothing." "He sighed heavily, accepted
