Traffic police in New York City were permitted to go coatless in the sweltering heat last week but were ordered to purchase invisible suspenders "to keep up their neat appearance." Let's see, isn't that why firemen wear red suspenders?

The public had always supposed that Aimee and her barytone husband, Dave, lived in a glass house because it seemed everything they did got into the newspapers, the courts or in the news reels. And now it appears the glass wasn't shatter-proof.

There seems still to be considerable question whether three by two beer is intoxicating. Why not let come hombre drink all he's inclined to imbibe and then apply the old test which was burnt into boards throughout the length and breadth of the land when pyrography was a craze: "When your heels hit hard, and your voice grows strong, and you laugh like hell at any fool song." If he does, it is.

According to the Detroit News, another of humanity's needs is a bridge table that collapses as easily as almost any kind of international conference.

An American Scotland Yard might be a fine thing, the Detroit News agrees with Senator Copeland, but reminds the senator that in detective novels it is the rule that the Yard always knows of some brilliant amateur who will solve the crime when it has failed.

With a new wife on his hands, Elliott Roosevelt is crying out for a job, saying in a tone of desperation, "I want to go to work—I must go to work." Why doesn't he try to get on in Washington? He might get a letter to Jim Farley.

Bible School Lesson Study!

Sunday, August 13th By L. Neitzel, Murdock, Neb.

"Hannah"

I Sam. 1:9-11, 2:28; 2:1, 2. Especial emphasis should be laid upon the theme of "Religion in the home," in what it consist. What should our homes be doing to train up a race of God-fearing men, and women? What improvements should be made in the religious educational work of our church?

The time of Samuel's birth is 1171 B. C. in Ramah; his father's name is Elkannah and his mother's, Hannah, who is one of the great women of the Bible; she was a woman of deep piety and a profound sense of duty. Samuel could have had no better parents and a man's parents have much to do with his making. There is only one cloud in that otherwise religious home—polygamy. The old patriarch Jacob had the same trouble, one wife jealous of the other; it was very difficult to raise children in that atmosphere. God permitted this in the early history of man; it was not the purpose of God from the beginning. (Gen. 2:24). Elkannah done much to aid the jealousy, in showing his preference for Hannah. Tradition tells us that Elkannah did not marry Peninnah until all hope of Hannah having a son was gone. He might have remembered the story of Abraham and Jacob. We see the family at their annual pilgrimage at Shiloh, where the tabernacle was at this particular time. Here it was on one occasion when Peninnah's ugliness had been so cruel, that Hannah could not refrain from weeping so bitterly that she was unable to partake of the feast. So Elkannah came to her and tried to soothe her, but to no avail. She quietly withdrew and went off by herself to pray, for she was a woman of deep piety and knew where to find alleviation for her sorrow, at the throne of God's grace, where she had often found it before. A lesson for the burdened soul. How precious is the invitation of Jesus: "Come unto me all ye that are heavy laden." We should be found more often at the throne of grace! The priest Eli took note of her; he corrected his mistake (See Chapt. 1:17) and dismissed her with his blessing and a promise that God would grant her petition. In her bitterness of soul she vowed a vow. (See v. 11). This vow she religiously performed. That does not always happen. How often do people cry to God in distress and make rash promises; but when the storm and trial is over, forget all about their promises. The Psalmist said: "All men are liars," and he was not far wrong. Here is an instance of God hearing and answering prayer. We note further that after Hannah had prayed, she left the sanctuary, cheerful and happy, faithfully trusting in God for the fulfillment of his promise.

In due time a son is born—what a joy came with the baby into that home! Now Hannah has a responsibility thrust upon her, and she is ready to do her part. Her reproach is taken away; she is now a "mother in Israel," and how tenderly she watches over the boy. "She will not risk any danger, she stays home until the child is weaned, then brings him to the priest, that the boy may serve in the tabernacle. When was the child weaned? Some say at the end of three years, others say five years. We would express our opinion that he was brought to the priest when he was thirteen, as a son of the law, like Jesus. If sooner he needed a guardian; he performed service which he could not do if younger and take care of himself. Thus should children be consecrated to God, and given in his special care, which we do in holy baptism.

What a happy day that was when the whole family goes to Shiloh; what anticipation and preparation! Elkannah leads three bullocks to be sacrificed as thank offerings to God. We hope that Peninnah had the good grace to join in with the rest in the jollification. "What else can one do that is so valuable as to contribute a human life to the world and then so direct it as to make it a blessing to mankind? How insignificant the tomb that marks the final resting place of men that merely absorb from society in comparison with those monuments of flesh and blood left by obscure heroes whose graves are forgotten." (Hon. W. J. Bryan). The name of the baby is significant, meaning "Asked of God." After the sacrifice, Samuel was given in charge of the priest—a wonderful act of self denial. It was no common grace that could so completely sacrifice all her personal feelings, and so thoroughly honor God. What a rebuke to many Christian men and women, who are so unwilling to commit themselves openly to any form of Christian service—unwilling to be identified with religious work! Having been so signally blessed and favored of Jehovah, Hannah does not forget the giver.

In a joyous hymn of thanksgiving and praise she extols the goodness and mercies of God. This outburst of exultant joy shows Hannah as a poetess equal with Mirriam, Deborah and David. And so God blessed Hannah more, for she had three sons and two daughters, but none like this first son, the child of prayer, the dedicated boy. The unworthy sons of Eli come into the frame of this picture. God rejected them and they were slain; but Samuel was not led away from the service of God by their ungodly life. The overindulgent father would not rebuke them, so God removed them.

Questions and Answers in Wheat Allotment Program
Question: Some farmers are asking whether or not they can go ahead with sales of their present wheat crop and still be eligible to receive the proposed compensation payments?
Answer: There is no reason at all for any farmer to change his plans for selling this year's crop. Allotments will be based on past average production, not in any way on wheat sales. Any farmer is perfectly free to sell his wheat when he wants to, to whom he wants to and how he wants to. This wheat plan is not based on sales and places no restriction on sales.

Question: What can a farmer do with the acres he takes out of production? Must he let them lie idle?
Answer: Absolutely not. He will be in a position to plant soil-building and erosion-preventing crops such as legumes and grass. Or he can plant food and feed crops for his own use. The only restriction will be that he must not plant crops which will add to existing surpluses of nationally produced farm products. This plan really offers a fine chance to give many run-down and depleted acres a rest and change—and without sacrifice of immediate cash.

Question: At one time wheat was produced on 75 million acres. This has been reduced to approximately 60 million acres. What provision is being made to prevent such land from being brought back into production?
Answer: The wheat plan attaches a parity payment to the domestically consumed portions of each farmer's crop. There is, therefore, no price incentive to raise more than the allotted bushels. Any stimulation, therefore, would come from world prices.

Question: Is there any exemption for the small farmer who uses wheat in his crop rotation on a very limited acreage by which he may continue a sound method of farming without being penalized.
Answer: No.
Question: What penalty will follow if a farmer receives his first payment in September and seeds his abandoned acreage in November?

Answer: His contract will be canceled. He will receive no parity payments. The payment advanced him in September must be returned to the government.

Question: Will the amount withheld for administration, estimated at 2 cents a bushel, be uniform in all counties?
Answer: Probably not. It will vary with the amount of wheat raised in the county. It will be smallest in the large wheat counties and highest in those counties having a large number of farms with a small acreage on each farm. In such counties the cost of administration may equal the benefits returned.

Question: What about the man who planted wheat last fall and his wheat is not worth cutting this year? Is he eligible?
Answer: Yes.

Question: Can any other commodities such as rye, flour or corn meal or other substitutes not considered basic commodities, be taxed?
Answer: Yes, in case it can be shown that consumers are shifting to these substitutes.

Question: Who will make the compensatory cash payments to the farmer entitled to such payments?
Answer: The Secretary of Agriculture.

Question: When will the compensatory cash payments be made?
Answer: The first payment will be made about September 15, 1933. Two-thirds of the total payment for 1933 will be made at this time. The remaining one-third will be paid about June 1, 1934, after proof of compliance with the contract has been obtained.

ONWARD
Long after the last survivor of this harried generation shall have passed from the scene, men and women as yet unborn will be walking up and down the earth wondering what it's all about. "In the midst of other we than ours," they will meet with problems that appear insoluble. Some of them will give one frightened look around and flee the field, just as some of our generation have faltered and quit. But most will carry on, even as most of us. Most will perceive instinctively that if those who have traveled the road before were able to make the grade then they, too, can make it, just as we of today are inspired to renewed effort by the consciousness that our forerunners certainly had it no easier than we but, in all probability, much harder.

Long after the last of us shall have finished the course, men and women will be divided on what to do about matters. Some will offer one recipe and some another. Some will advise this, others that. From time to time the argument will sink to the low level of sheer quarrelsomeness, perhaps flame into war. Then, for a bloody season, men will run sharp, pointed, saw-toothed knives through one another and mow one another down with machine guns and suffocate one another with poison gasses. That ended, everybody will be sorry. They will confess their guilt and move on, as best they can, from there. So moves our generation on, so move the unnumbered generations in endless procession—retarded now and again, brought almost to a halt, but never quite; never quite stationary, never slipping back, always and always moving on.

"Long and long has the grass been growing, long and long has the rain been falling, long has the globe been rolling round," Walt Whitman sings his songs and moves on. So sang Milton and Shakespeare and Dante and blind Homer and all those heroic nameless bards of history unchronicled. So lived the masses of the people, the mechanics, the artisans of all kinds, the thinkers, the rich, the poor, the well-to-do, the cowardly, the brave, the high, the low, the in-between, the philanthropist, the miser, the master and the slave. Lived and laughed and wept and laughed again—and moved on, making room for generations that would not be denied.

Thus the triumph of Creation. Slowly, surely the scales fall from the eyes. Slowly the vision clears, each generation's vision a little clearer than that of its predecessor. Onward, a little upward, the procession moves. And the globe keeps rolling round.—World-Herald.
