Bible School Lesson Study!

Sunday, December 10 By L. Neitzel, Murdock, Neb.

"Paul in Caesarea"

Acts 24:10-23.

Our lesson study includes Chapters 21-26. It is necessary for a proper understanding and the short space of time (three months) to study the Apostle Paul, that these chapters form our lesson. The time of the lesson is Paul's imprisonment at Caesarea, 5:8; 59 A. D. His appeal to Caesar (the emperor Nero), A. D. 59.

We can only touch on the high spots in the Apostle's life. Paul is on the way to Jerusalem. The journey from Melitius to Jerusalem is fascinating reading; many classic places are mentioned. Paul had some forebodings of the coming sorrow and trial and in this spirit he prophesied to the Ephesian elders that they "should see his face no more." At Tyre, where he remained a week with the disciples, he was urged not to go to Jerusalem. At Caesarea he was entertained by the Evangelist Philip, who had four unmarried daughters who prophesied what was to come. Here Agabus in a symbolic way took Paul's girdle, tied his own hands and feet and said, "So will the owner be bound at Jerusalem."

But Paul had set his face to go to Jerusalem, like his Lord. "I am ready, not to be bound only, but to die at Jerusalem, for the name of the Lord, Jesus." (Mark 10:33). To show the Jews that he is a Jew, he consents to go through the rite of purification with four others, he paying the expense for all. This took seven days. All went well until he was seen walking with Trophimus, the Ephesian—a Greek, when some bigoted Jews jumped to the absurd conclusion that he had taken the Gentile with him into the temple. (The teacher must explain the consequences of such act.) A riot started, the temple police closed the doors of the temple to the inner court. Soldiers were rushed from the castle Antonio, Paul was rescued by them, then bound with chains and led to the castle, which stood on higher ground than the temple. When on the stairs, he asked to be allowed to speak to the people, permission was given and he addressed them in Aramaic, utilizing every opportunity to preach Christ. The centurion was mistaken in his prisoner, believing him to be a certain Egyptian (the teacher will explain) and was about to scourge Paul, when he asserted his Roman citizenship.

Then we find Paul before the Sanhedrin, where he confounds his enemies by dividing their ranks, setting them against each other. Paul being a Pharisee, believed in the resurrection, while the Sadducees denied it. Nothing was decided. Paul remained a prisoner—but God was pleased with a prisoner—but God was pleased with his servant; he visited him and told him that he should have his long cherished wish and repeat this testimony in Rome—and his enemies must pay his fare.

A hearing is had at Caesarea before the governor, Felix. The smart lawyer, Tertullus, was outsmarted by Paul. (Read both addresses, Acts 24: 5-8, 10-21). But a two year imprisonment followed. Omitting the private interview of Felix and Drusilla (who had left her husband and lived with this man), when Paul touched the sore spot in their ungodly lives, they got scared, frightened and trembled and sent the preacher away. Portius Festus relieves Felix, who left Paul, a prisoner, on his hands. Festus was a fair man, who would, under Roman law bring the accusers and the accused together.

Court was held at Caesarea. A delegation had come from Jerusalem to prove their charges against Paul. At this point, Festus showed a weakness that changed the whole affair. Paul would not consent to go to Jerusalem, but being in a Roman court where he could not get justice, he sees no other way but to appeal to Caesar. With this appeal, Festus had nothing else to do but to send Paul to Rome.

While waiting for a chance to send a number of prisoners to Rome, Festus got company—Bernice and Agrippa, who came to salute Festus. So he puts the case of Paul up to Agrippa, whose curiosity is aroused and who shows a keen interest in this famous prisoner. A day is set and God's prophecy (Acts 9:15) that Paul should bear the "name of Jesus before kings" is about to be fulfilled.

It is a very auspicious audience—great pomp is displayed. (See Chapt. 25:23). But Paul is not frightened on the occasion—it is the greatest moment in his ministerial life. All things come to him who waits. Will Christ fail him? Will the simple rehearsal of his life story be the proper thing to bring to these people? Paul is at his best! It is the third repetition of his conversion and call to his life's work. What does his address show these people?

(1) That the Messiah should come; (2) that he should suffer; (3) that he should rise again from death, the first fruit of them that sleep, and (4) that in the Messiah's days, the religion of Israel should be taught to the Gentiles.

What is the effect on his hearers? Festus is very much agitated; Agrippa is stirred to the innermost depths of his soul: "Almost"—but lost! Of the five defenses of Paul, this is the most magnificent and it will always be classed as one of the greatest orations of the world. One of the most spectacular court proceedings ended in the acquittal of Paul, but on his appeal, he must go to Rome.

"O, the depth of the riches, both of wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out!" (Rom. 11:33).

BETWEEN REAL LAW AND GANG LAW

One of the amazing things about criminal gangs is the risk that the gang leaders take. It is not so much the risk in criminal action, for gangs work only when they have or believe they have a reasonably safe advantage over their victims. But the chances that marked leaders take with both statutory law and gang law are so great that few such leaders remain long in security. They are killed or imprisoned.

Verne C. Miller was one of the most elusive of criminals. For months he had been hunted in every state. But for police blundering, he would have been taken or killed recently in Chicago. He escaped that trap, but he fell into one set by his kind in another city, presumably Detroit.

An inherent danger of organized crime to members of the organization is illustrated again in this instance. Gangs are created for organized depredations for profit. As in business, competition ensues. Competition in gangdom is despotic. Those engaged in it, when rivalry becomes destructive of profits, have no compunctions. They kill their own even more readily than they slay other victims. Thus the gangster lives between statutory law and gang law, and he stands in about as much danger from the one as from the other. The more conspicuous his leadership, the greater the hazard he takes.

Verne C. Miller is dead, and at least one of the union station murders is accounted for. Five other leaders in middle West criminal operations still are at large. But it is only a matter of time when Floyd, Underhill, Davis, Phillips and Galatas, to say nothing of lesser gangsters, will be brought to account for their criminal records. The abiding hope is that they may be brought to justice by legal processes.

ROOSEVELT'S HAPPY HUMANITARIAN SPIRIT

Nothing is more admirable in Franklin Delano Roosevelt, and nothing endears him more to the hearts of the American people, than his happy spirit of practical humanitarianism. Flowering from the soil of his own suffering, his sympathy for the handicapped is an inspiring example of generous courage. His note of cheery helpfulness in his broadcast message as he dedicated the 100-thousand-dollar hall given by citizens of Georgia to the beneficent Warm Springs foundation for the aid of the crippled.

That noble institution arose from the kindly impulses of the man who had found in the scalding Georgian waters release from the cruel disabilities of infantile paralysis. He gave labor and money to endowing the pool as a source of hope and help for others similarly afflicted. For that service hundreds of once bedridden children and adults are grateful. Rejoicing in the restored vigor that fitted him for the onerous duties of the government of New York state, and that now sustains him under the heavy burdens of the presidency, Franklin D. Roosevelt seeks to make the new Bethesda and example of what might be done throughout the land for the half million persons young and old, whom a dread disease has incapacitated.

Opinions differ as to the wisdom of some of President Roosevelt's policies, but no one can doubt the sincerity and depth of his concern for those who live frustrated lives, whether the cause be physical or of some other nature. He thinks and feels in terms of human values. His ideal for the nation is one of widely diffused opportunity and welfare. Even the critics of his official acts are disposed to temper their opinions with recognition of his high and honest purpose and to shape criticism constructively for the sake of that ideal.—Chicago Daily News.

The question just around the corner is whether motor drivers can drive any more goofily on legal liquor than they did on bootleg.

Albert H. Wiggin denies that he ever sent word to President Hoover to "mind his own business," and we are inclined to place full credence in Mr. Wiggin's version of the affair. Mr. Wiggin's modus operandi never included open rudeness to persons prominently situated. His particular talents for cussedness lay along entirely different lines.

It appears from the broadcast of the Army-Notre Dame game Saturday that the Notre Dame scoring was done while two of Army's leading stalwarts were resting on the sidelines. "Of course, it's only a game of make believe," says an Army supporter as cheerfully as possible, "but it is that the kind of management we must depend upon for the defense of our shores some day?"
