Needless to say, all the little folks enjoyed a very fine time and are hoping Faye Ellen may have many more such happy birthdays.

Demand for Acreage Property

The predirition made about a year ago by a Lincoln real estate dealer that the East O street paving would create a demand for acreage and suburban homes, on or near the pavement, is holding true. At least two inquiries have been made for acreage homes near Eagle. One is from a retired farmer who wants a small place where he can keep a few head of livestock and chickens—something to occupy part of his time. The other is from a man whose work is in Lincoln, but who desires to be out where his family may raise a part of their living by means of a garden, a cow, chickens, etc.

The opportunity is here to capitalize on this demand and secure a goodly number of such suburban residents along the O street paved highway, who will find it easy to go to and from their work in the city and yet live in the great outdoors far removed from the crowded conditions of the city. Why not make the most of it, and turn the attention of prospective land seekers to the advantages of locating near Eagle, one of the best little towns on the highway.

CABINET SHAKEUP FORESEEN

Rome. A new cabinet shakeup, with Premier Mussolini relinquishing the portfolios of corporations and interior and retaining the ministries of war, navy, air and foreign affairs, was reported imminent in high official circles. The report was given support by Mussolini's words to former Air Minister Italo Balbo when he departed from Rome Saturday to assume the governorship of Libya. "You will not be the only minister to leave his portfolio," Mussolini said. "Before the month ends there will be other changes."

Arthur Mullen Denies a Report He will Resign

Republicans in Meantime Suggest Inquiry on Alleged Lobby—Proposal for Legislation.

Washington.—Republican senators pitched their own ideas into the party disturbances of the democrats, proposing that President Roosevelt's objection to members of national committees practicing law in the national capital be backstopped by congressional legislation and suggesting a lobby investigation on Capitol hill. Rumors of further resignations within the democratic national committee floated about administration offices.

Close on the heels of the resignation of Robert Jackson, New Hampshire national committeeman and secretary of the organization, came a report that Arthur F. Mullen, Nebraska committeeman, might resign. Mullen said he contemplated no such action.

The proposal for legislation to prohibit members of national political committees from practicing law before any governmental agency came from the Michigan republican, Vandenberg. He introduced in the senate a bill designed to effectuate such a legal restriction.

Joseph H. Choate, jr., federal alcohol control administrator, a New York republican, told newspapermen that various well connected democratic lawyers had written letters to him making requests in behalf of clients, but that "none of them ever got anything out of it." He refused to mention any names.

A second republican, Robinson of Indiana, in an address charged administration control of radio, and told the senate: "I do not know if Mr. Farley (chairman of the national committee and postmaster general) is among the men referred to by the president as engaged in lobbying activities here at the capitol, but this reminds me to say that in my opinion the lobby committee ought to be revived, resolutions ought to be adopted providing again for such a lobby committee as we had a few years ago."

The committee at that time, headed by the late Senator Caraway, conducted a general inquiry into lobby activities.

The rapid fire changes within the democratic organization appeared to have left those within the organization in a state of perplexity. There was an absence of any ideas as to candidates. There was, however, a definite feeling about the capital that there were but two men directing any reconstruction of the committee, either under way or about to be put under way.—President Roosevelt and Farley.

State Officers Silent.

Governor Bryan was absent from his office Thursday on a mission not disclosed and other state officers refused to express themselves on the ethics involved in the position of Mullen, who is practicing law at Washington as attorney for corporations before federal departments and courts.

Recent magazine articles carrying Mullen's name and picture have had eager readers at the capitol. Governor Bryan has in published interviews, without mentioning names, used caustic terms in discussing those who earn commissions at Washington. Rumors have been heard for some time at the capitol that Mullen would be asked to resign his membership on the democratic national committee. Judge J. J. Thomas, chairman of the state democratic committee, now at Washington as an active member of the federal reserve board, has continued to represent the state committee, altho there has been discussion as to whether he would resign before the next state convention elects his successor.

Quick Action on Relief Plea for Billion Needed

Emergency Funds Will Be Exhausted February 11, According to the President.

Washington.—Speedy congressional action on President Roosevelt's proposal that he be given $1,116,000,000 for emergency activities appeared necessary to maintain the administration's announced policy of seeing no one cold or hungry this winter. The president said funds for the federal emergency relief administration and the civil works administration, both headed by Harry L. Hopkins, would be exhausted by Feb. 11.

Included in the vast emergency request will be 350 millions for Hopkins to carry on his relief activities thru the spring, civil works until May 1, and emergency relief grants to states into the summer. If congress grants the presidential request, however, the administration expects to place additional thousands on the civil works rolls as a result of this week's hour reduction order.

Communities of less than 2,500 and rural areas have been permitted to reduce the working hours of persons on civil works projects to 15 hours a week and to employ other persons to take up the difference. Civil works employes had been working 30 hours a week.

One of two reasons for the change was that employment agencies in many such areas had four or five times as many persons on their lists as there were jobs. The other, and what many here considered the most important, was the fact that civil works wages often were higher than the wages authorized under NRA codes and also higher than farm wages.

There recently was a dispute between Hugh S. Johnson, NRA administrator, and Hopkins over the wage question. Hopkins advocated higher wages, and fixed a scale that would permit earnings on civil works jobs ranging from $15 a week upward according to the skill and type of work. He adopted the rules of the public works administration, which is supplying 400 millions for civil works projects.

Complaints poured in from all sides. President Roosevelt said Wednesday they had resulted in a study of the best means of preventing civil works wages being so high that workers would be tempted to leave private industry or the farms. The president said Hopkins was correcting this situation thru lessening work hours instead of cutting rates of pay.

The admission of President Roosevelt at the inception of the civil works program against any political favoritism also has made trouble for Hopkins. There have been frequent complaints on that score by both democrats and republicans, Hopkins disclosed. He said in some instances there had been evidence of favoritism.

Hopkins several weeks ago removed all county civil works representatives in Wisconsin because in each instance the county administrator was the democratic party county chairman. Investigations are under way in Pennsylvania and California of charges of political favoritism and other irregularities.

It has been charged that in the Pittsburgh area city councilmen in 186 municipalities were on civil works payrolls as foremen, and that in one instance a man who drew $2,600 a year as a member of the Pennsylvania state legislature was a civil works foreman in a Pittsburgh ward.

At the conclusion a neat sum which had been taken up was presented to Mr. and Mrs. Rauth to be used for the purchase of whatever they might think most proper. Again, on the following evening, they were guests for supper at the home of their friends, Mr. and Mrs. John A. Stander, and following the supper in came a host of their friends who were wise to the fact of the anniversary and their being supper guests at the Stander home. So another most pleasant evening was spent. In departing all extended best wishes for a long and happy life.

VOTES CAPITAL LIQUOR LAW

Washington.—A new liquor law for the national capital, permitting sale by the drink in hotels, restaurants and clubs, was approved by the senate despite warnings that it would mean a return of the saloon. The senate passed a house bill to set up a private license system here after virtually no debate. A substitute proposed by Senator apper to provide a dispensary system was rejected without a record vote.

Borah, Glass Join with Nye in Fight on NRA

Senator Warns Recovery Program Will Fail Unless Anti-Trust Laws Are Re-enacted.

Washington, Jan. 18.—Joining Senator Nye (R.), North Dakota, in attacking alleged monopolistic tendencies under the NRA, Senator Borah (R.), Idaho, warned in the senate Thursday the administration's recovery program would fail unless the anti-trust laws are re-enacted and enforced.

Nye had threatened a senate investigation of the NRA unless codes were quickly revised in the interest of the consumer and the small business man, but Borah said this would not be enough.

He demanded the anti-trust laws be restored, contending they would not be in conflict with the NRA.

Expected Attack.

The long-expected attack on NRA policies by the two republican independents brought the recovery administration under senate fire for the first time.

Borah warned that administration of the NRA would affect every other administration policy, including monetary changes and public works appropriations.

"One of the most vicious examples of coercion by a large monopoly of smaller producers is the domination by the General Electric Co., said Nye.

"In the formation and administration of the electrical code, the dominant position of General Electric, as a producer of incandescent lamps, is not only maintained but strengthened," Borah said.

"It is proposed to appropriate large sums of money for public works, but who will get the money if prices the laborer must pay are constantly increased? It will be of very little benefit to him."

Hits "Steel Trust."

Borah hit out at the "great steel combine" and said under the practice of sitting around a table and "agreeing on the bids" for government work, the government only receives one bid from these interests.

"Millions of dollars are being extorted from the pockets of the masses of the common people," he asserted, "for prices fixed by combines and trusts, notwithstanding provisions of the codes."

Borah said the bids submitted for steel rails to Railroad Co-ordinator Eastman were within one quarter of a cent of being "identical."

Senator Glass (D.), Virginia, said "thousands of struggling industries are being driven out of business" by the codes.

Borah replied he did not believe President Roosevelt would stand for such a policy and it was he in the end who would "decide the policy."
