Another thing that is hurting this country is that there are too many round trip tickets.

If conditions had not changed, in another year only the large corporations could have boasted of an extra vice-president.

"The press is finally given a break in a new Hollywood film," says the Detroit News. "It shows a reporter wiping his feet before entering a window."

The biggest mystery about the Dillinger escape is why Dillinger stayed in jail so long, considering the privileges, unless it was so comfortable he hated to leave.

The reaction of the St. Louis woman who was "disgusted with crime" after having been caught is nothing novel. Most persons are disgusted when they fail to get away with their wrongdoings.

John Dillinger's gangster pals sat all day, dressed for traveling, in the jail at Lima, O., waiting for John to come and rescue them, but John not only didn't show up, but didn't even send a lawyer.

The attorney general says the country needs twelve new laws to cope properly with crime. Or perhaps if we had one to cope with the criminal lawyers, we could worry along without the other eleven for a while.

Considering how many millions of people have already lived on this earth without ever causing it to even hesitate in its revolving when they died, there doesn't seem to be any reason why any of us ever should feel so doggone important.

We are somewhat surprised at the inconsistency in Dr. Stravinski's attitude. He is the director of the U. S. R. R. penal home for derelict children, and although he believes it is bad for children to be toppled off their thrones of real or imaginary omnipotence, he doubtless is convinced that it is a good thing for cars.

Some of these liquor labels are comparable with those pretty purple and gold stock certificates.

It seems pretty strange to the used car shopper to be looking at reconditioned cars these days with 16,000 or 20,000 miles on the speedometer. Only a few years ago, all used cars showed 7,021 miles.

We hope things never reach the active revolutionary stage in this country. They say when the United States recognized the new government in Cuba, young Havana girls went around the street kissing strangers.

General Johnson's NRA speeches seem much milder if read right after looking at one of his recent news pictures. In fact, some of them give you the impression of having been toned down considerably by the editor.

We hadn't realized how far advanced in idealism the new deal administration really was until it called upon those lawyers who constitute our congress to pass laws curbing the activities of lawyers in the national capital.

After a fellow becomes accustomed to the startling experience of seeing, in the rear vision mirror, a radical new teardrop model bearing down upon him, he recovers his composure and drives on, feeling very modern and satisfied with himself.

Mrs. Roosevelt appeared at the cabinet anniversary dinner March 4 in the same gown she wore at the inauguration March 4 last year, thereby inciting the envy of a vast number of women who have found they can no longer get into the clothes they wore in March, 1933.

The man who bossed the clearing of New York streets in the recent snowstorm found that most of the loafers on the job were men under 50. They weren't loafing. They were just disciples of the new philosophy that if they don't work and worry too much, the sun or the government will melt the snow.

New York City owes more money than all the forty-eight states, according to a recent accounting. Tammany may be gone, but not forgotten.

Green paint may be removed from the seat of a pair of white duck trousers, with the assistance of a quart of turpentine, a stiff brush and a pair of scissors.

There is considerable doubt on where the designers of some of the new cars got their ideas. Some assert they got them from the tear drop, and others say they more nearly resemble a saxophone player's profile.

"I see that one of the members of Mrs. Roosevelt's overseas flying party is Professor Tugwell," said a tired business man yesterday. "I hope nothing happens to the airplane, but if it should take a nose dive into the ocean, I certainly hope the usual rule of women and children first will be followed in the rescue."

There is some complaint that the contract bridge scores published by the playing card companies give scores only up to five undertricks, leaving the scorekeeper at some inconvenience when he wishes to set down a penalty of seven undertricks, doubled and vulnerable. Well, we suppose the publishers optimistically supposed that anyone who opened a bid ought to take at least one trick, but it seems they were too hopeful.

A Texas man says the Republican newspapers, which are to blame for most of our troubles in the country at this time, have failed to make the country "compliance conscious" in respect to the NRA, and urges that the government muzzle the newspapers. And then suppose the newspapers went out and made a lot of money, as the government-censored newspapers in Germany and Italy have done? Every other industry in the country would come in and demand to be muzzled too.

CZECHS LAUD MASARYK ON HIS 48TH BIRTHDAY
Prague, March 8.—The last stronghold of democracy on the European continent, Czechoslovakia celebrated the eighty-fourth birthday of her president, Thomas G. Masaryk today. No orders to celebrate were issued. No flags decorated the streets. The president's pictures and busts appeared in windows. Crowds gathered in the enormous coffee houses.

Masaryk received diplomats, officials and well wishers at the historic castle.

HITLER'S FIRST YEAR

It was exactly a year ago today that the National Socialists, headed by Chancellor Adolf Hitler, scored their overwhelming victory in the reichstag election that really established the present, German regime. Although Herr Hitler had been appointed chancellor of Germany at the end of January, last year, with quasi-dictatorial powers, the appointment came from President Paul von Hindenburg and was hedged about with such restrictions that in theory, at least, the Nazis shared their control with the conservative Nationalists, new cabinet. The election of March who held many key positions in the 5 not only eliminated all Nationalist restrictions upon Chancellor Hitler and his Nazis, but even removed any presidential check by showing that the appointed regime commanded popular support.

In the election the Nazis polled more than 17 million votes, compared to about 3 million by their Nationalist allies, out of a total of 39 million. Thereafter, the unequal partnership was soon dissolved. Chancellor Hitler emerged as absolute dictator of Germany, and the elderly president, who had been very active in the government until that time, retired from the political arena almost altogether. Now a year later several mysteries still surround the creation of the Hitler dictatorship, not the least of these being why the Nationalists ever thought they could dominate the new regime, as they did. Responsibility for the burning of the reichstag building in Berlin on the night of February 28, of course, has never been fixed, although the government's assertion that the fire was part of a Communist conspiracy to seize the state played an important part in the election.

The fact remains that the Nazi regime dates from March 5, 1933. Competent foreign observers are inclined to divide the year that has elapsed since then into two fairly equal parts. The first six months or so was a period of great violence. The prosecution of the Jews and Communists at that time aroused international indignation. But other groups, including Socialists and liberals, received similar treatment. In fact, all organized opposition was ruthlessly crushed. In the early fall, however, a halt was called to the use of violent methods and since then the government seems to have proceeded with greater moderation, although all opposition, real or imaginary, is still sternly suppressed.

In the last six months the more conservative elements among the Nazis have seemed to be in control, with the Socialist program of the radical wing held in check. There also has been the development of a more realistic and conciliatory foreign policy. Democracy has been crushed in Germany, but capitalism remains, not greatly changed. Opinions differ as to the gains and losses involved in the Nazi experiment. But there is general agreement that the Hitler dictatorship has come to stay and that, as in the case of the Communist regime in Russia, the world must be prepared to accept that fact.—Kansas City Times.

AMERICAN EXPORTS

In his message to congress last week, President Roosevelt said that "important branches of our agriculture," as well as "those branches of American industry whose mass-production methods have led the world," stand to gain greatly through a revival of our lost foreign trade. In the first group he mentioned specifically cotton, tobacco, hog products, rice, cereals and fruits. Producers of them all, found profitable markets abroad for their surplus goods before the depression. In 1929 the United States exported 54 per cent of its cotton, 41 per cent of its tobacco, 33 per cent of its lard, 25 per cent of its rice, 18 per cent of its wheat and 17 per cent of its pears. From one-sixth to more than half of each of these crops was sold in foreign markets.

The President singled out no industrial products for special mention, but might easily have chosen from a long list examples to support his thesis. In the same pre-depression year we shipped abroad 31 per cent of the lubricating oil produced in the United States, 34 per cent of the kerosene, 23 per cent of the agricultural machinery, 29 per cent of the sewing machines, 21 per cent of the locomotives and 40 per cent of the typewriters.

How many men and women engaged in the production of industrial goods and agricultural products were directly dependent on foreign trade for their livelihood we know on the authority of a Republican statesman whose eight years of service in the department of commerce particularly qualified him to make an accurate estimate. In 1928 Herbert Hoover, then a candidate for president, stated that "our total volume of exports translates itself into employment for 2,400,000 families." The collapse of this once thriving trade has been followed by what President Roosevelt described in his message as "heart-breaking readjustments."—New York Times.

Egyptians Rebuilt Faces

Spokane, Wash.—The art of rebuilding faces and patching up torn ears and noses was practiced when the Pharaohs ruled Egypt and the pyramids were only engineers' dreams. Dr. Gordon B. New, specialist of the Mayo foundation, told the regional meeting of the American College of Surgeons. Since ancient times, however, facial surgery has made remarkable advance, said the Rochester, Minn., specialist.

The ancient Egyptian surgeon was aware of the possibilities of facial reconstruction and found patients among the warriors disfigured by enemy spears and youths badly handled in sports of the day. Dr. New said, but only in recent years has this type of surgery reached the point where almost any disfigurement can be obliterated.
