Claims Shortage of Skilled Labor for Public Works

F. C. Cornell, Acting Re-employment Director for Nebraska Gives Classifications Needed.

Mr. F. V. Cornell, acting re-employment director for Nebraska points to a serious shortage of available skilled labor in many counties of the state. This has been brought about by the heavy demand of skilled labor through the national re-employment offices in various counties for placement on public works jobs. For this reason, Mr. Cornell states that all workers skilled in highway work should contact the re-employment office in the county in which they reside, each thirty-day period. They should also notify their office as to their willingness to go outside their home county to work on public works jobs.

This lack of skilled labor is rapidly becoming acute in certain sections of the state and all workers described below are requested to contact the national re-employment office in their home county at once: Blade graders, bull dozers, mixer operators, bull floaters, cement finishers, drag line operators, elevating grade operators, heavy caterpillar tractor operators.

The trend is distinctly upward in placements of unemployed people in private industry. The larger employers of labor are co-operating with the re-employment service and placements are steadily increasing week by week. However, Mr. Cornell points out that the smaller employer of labor—he who employs normally from one to ten people, has a greater bearing on the employment situation than the larger employer of labor, inasmuch as in the state there are literally thousands in this class, who can, by extending their efforts in the placing of one or more additional employees through the national re-employment service, assimilate a greater number of unemployed than in all our major industries.

Every employer is requested to endeavor, if at all possible, to increase his payroll in his own private interests as well as in the interests of his community, through giving his fellow citizen work, of any type—or nature.
