BLOWN OUT BIGGER THAN CHANCESHIP

The essential facts about the campaign against industrial and statistical frauds of the federal government are in general agreement: there is a conflict between the individual and the public, and the conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public. The essence of the conflict is that the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public. The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

It may be that most of the issues involved in the conflict between the individual and the public are resolved through the individual and the public. But it is also true that the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

We hope the following considerations will provide some insight into the conflict between the individual and the public.

First, we note that the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

Second, we note that the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.

The conflict is not resolvable through the individual and the public because the interests of the individuals are usually more numerous and more powerful than the interests of the public.