

BEHIND the SCENES in HOLLYWOOD

By HARRISON CARROLL

Hollywood.—Plenty of excitement here when a local newspaper printed a picture of Ida Lupino in a sick-bed. The health department gave Ida's doctor a summons to explain why he let photographers into a quarantined room. He denied responsibility, so did the studio and the affair had the makings of a big mystery until it came out that the picture was taken when Ida was sick several months ago.

Ida Lupino

The blonde Paramount star has been able to sit up and talk long distance to her father, Stanley Lupino, who has run up a $1,000 phone bill from London. Ida received a box of flowers and a cheering note from Hal Rosson, Jean Harlow's ex, who also is recuperating from infantile paralysis.

It will tickle Hollywood to know that the very English John Parrow once impersonated Abraham Lincoln. It happened at the Criterion theater here when they were running the old Rocket Brothers film on the life of the martyred president. The picture was silent, but when the time came for the Gettysburg address, the theater manager had contrived a big dramatic effect by having George Billings, well-known Lincoln impersonator, mount a platform behind the screen and deliver the memorable words. The idea worked fine until Billings became ill. Parrow, then newly-arrived in Hollywood and a friend of the manager's, was drafted to fill the spot.

The most dramatic and terrifying war scenes ever filmed will startle motion picture audiences when Fox releases "The World Moves On." A small group of Hollywood correspondents saw this film run off in the projection room at Winfield Sheehan's home, and unanimously tabbed it as one of Hollywood's important offerings of the year.

Following the fortunes of the Girard family, cotton merchants, from early New Orleans, through the World war, the big boom, the market crash and the growing nationalistic tendencies of later years, "The World Moves On," has epic sweep. The Girards, like the Rothschilds, sent members of the family into all parts of the world. In tracing their adventures, the picture gives a vivid analysis of conditions in Germany, France, England and the United States.

Implications of the film are awesome. The world moves on to more slaughter. Quick news-reel flashes of Hitler reviewing Nazi storm troops, of Mussolini receiving the fascist salute from his legions, of French war maneuvers, of marching thousands in Russia's famous Red Square, of Japanese regiments, of England's formations give grim reality to the war fleet, of America's mass airplane threat.

All too easily, this story could have ended upon a note of futility. And even now, with Producer Sheehan and Writer Reginald Berkeley doing their best to soften the finish, it is difficult to shake off the impression. "The World Moves On" is one of the most exciting films Hollywood has ever made. It also is one of the most alarming.

Classic fish story of the year is being told by Preston Foster. The M. G. M. actor headed his 25-foot motor boat to sea the other morning and stepped just short of the kelp beds. He turned off the motor and ascended to the deck when suddenly the boat shivered and there came a scraping sound as if the keel was grating on rocks. Poster rushed to the rail and looked over. There, to his amazement, he saw a whale. The huge bulk shifted and the front of the boat came into the air. Panicked, Foster dived into the engine room, started the motor and shoved it in reverse. He solemnly swears that the whale followed him for several minutes.

Preston Foster

All of which may not be as wild a tale as it sounds. Fishermen declare that the whale probably was trying to scrape barnacles off its back.

Knick-Knacks—Mivion Hopkins gave the gossip a treat by coming to the King's club with three boy friends. Many Hollywood celebrities cut to hear the Herberts, singers of sophisticated songs, newly-arrived at this late spot. . . Virginia Pine and George Raft, prominent among them. . . Larry Crabbe (they used to call him Buster) is sporting a shiner as black as a storm cloud. Believe it or not, he got it in a film fight. . . Muriel Kirkland dines at the Russian Eagle these evenings with Oscar Thompson, local banker. . . Sari Maritza is there, too, with Carter Herman. . . The first Los Angeles-to-Washington plane carried the print of Para-mount's "Shoot the Works." Arline Judge and husband, Wesley Ruggles, personally delivered it. . . Raquel Torres is ill with a cold.

Hollywood.—Credit Eddie Cantor with one of the funnier cracks about the quintuplets. The father of five daughters, the comedian cut the first clipping out and presented it to his wife.

"For years you've been bragging Ida," he said. "Take a look at this and see what is being done elsewhere."

In the stampede to get family pictures back on the screen, Fox leads off with an idea that ought to ring the gong at the box office. Though it's all supposed to be very secret, they are planning to team Will Rogers and the new child sensation, Shirley Temple.

Courtney Riley Cooper, well-known writer of circus and action stories, has been engaged to write a scenario in which Rogers is to play a round-house foreman living in a division point in the Rockies. Plot is to have strictly family appeal, with Will shown as the arbiter of the romances, squabbles and political affairs of the little railroad town.

The picture will be the first time Rogers has ever been teamed with anyone. A triumph, any way you look at it, for the 5½-year-old Shirley who has become a star in the amazing time of six months.

What well-known actress, now making a picture at an independent studio, introduced her new boy friend around as a well-known business man and then, two days later, got him a job working as an extra in a picture?

Did You Know? That El Brendel, the comic, always carries a small mirror that was given to him by a Boston fan many years ago?

Visit At Sioux City Mrs. Solomon and two daughters, Lillian and Mary, are enjoying a visit at Sioux City, Iowa, where they will be the guest of relatives and friends there for the next few days and enjoying an outing in the Iowa city.

Here's a quote from Lee Tracy that may startle you. "I would never care to associate with or even meet the wise-cracking, hand-waving type I play on the screen," says the star. "He would bore me to death."

And now even the film dancing girls are reacting to the censorship menace. A group of chorines have just organized themselves into a club called: "Little Women of Hollywood." They take names from the characters of the Louisa May Alcott classic.

A good sport, this Orizo Oriando, millionaire Spanish wine exporter now visiting the cinema city. He made his first trip to a studio the other day and begged Director Clarence Brown to let him work in a scene of "Sacred and Profane Love." He wanted no money.

Clarence Brown

The wealthy Spaniard had a grand time walking through several takes with a group of other atmosphere people.

But when he was through, the assistant director revealed that code regulations required that the actor receive a $7.50 check just like any other extra. Oriando protested vociferously he didn't want any money, but finally gave in and tucked the check away in his pocket as a souvenir.

Two minutes later he presented Brown with another check for $500 to be given to any charity Clarence saw fit.

Tear Gas Clouds Envelope Warring Strikers

Three thousand strikers, massed on the slopes of Rincon Hill, San Francisco, saw the State Belt Line Railroad operating under heavy police guard on the hill into the ranks of the strikers. This photo shows what resulted—a dramatic reminiscence of actual warfare. Helmeted through clouds of their own tear gas, grappling with or chasing pickets into a pocket at the base of Rincon Hill. This charge resulted in a riot in which many others wounded with clubs and scores more battle, one of many that occurred throughout the Governor of California, Frank E. Merriam formal declaring that "tumult and rioting" prevails in the city of San Francisco. The troops are scheduled to take over the waterfront war zone tonight (July 5).
