CANADA TO HONOR ITS DISCOVERER AT 400TH ANNIVERSARY FETES IN QUEBEC

QUEBEC CITY-Canada this year celebrates the 400th anniversary of its discovery by Jacques Cartier. From pictur-esque Gaspé, where he first landed in 1534, down the St. Lawrence to metropolitan Montreal, where he tried to run his long boats through the famous Lachine Rapids, picturesque fetes and ceremonies will commemorate the event which started the French exploration of a vast area of the North American continent, including the Mississippi Valley and a large part of what is now the Middle Western and Northwestern part of the United States. Like so many other early Atlantic explorers, Cartier was looking for Cathay when he found Canada and even King Francis believed that beautiful Quebec was part of the lands "which form the extremity of Asia towards the West." When Cartier headed into the St. Lawrence he was sure that he had at last found a Northwest Passage to Cathay. He had been cruising along the coast and, according to Francis Parkman, he had noted the natural wonder of the Bird Rocks, at Perce, where in past centuries gone a gigantic stone bridge must have connected Mont Joli and Bonaventure Island, now a government sanctuary for rare wild birds. On July 16, 1534, he sailed into the Bay of Gaspe to avoid a storm and on July 24 he landed at what is now the beautiful lit-tle village of Gaspé. There he erected a cross thirty feet high and claimed this part of "Cathay" in the name of Francis. and one of the ceremonies this summer at the very same spot will be the erection of a large off the present city of Quebec, eross of stone from Cartier's na- and still one of the most beautitive Brittany. Sure that he had found the way to China, Cartier | quois Indians told him he was sailed back to France, taking two Indians and a marvellous load of tall tales that were true. 'We saw a great multitude of wild men that were fishing for mackerels, whereof there is a great store.' For France he had also discovered one of the greatest fisheries in the world, off the Gaspe coast, which some Canadian historians believe had been fished by Europeans as early as the 12th Century. Possibly even Basque fishermen had been there before Cartier. It is certain that French fishing fleets rushed there when they heard Cartier's stories. In 1535 Cartier returned with a larger expedition to push up the Northwest Passage, the gorgeous St. Lawrence, "into Cathay." He hesitated at the wondrous gorge of the Saguenay River and Indians told him that up that river was a kingdom "rich in precious stones." When | back Roberval

HUNTING FOR CATHAY, HE FOUND CANADA IN 1534-President Roosevelt and the governors of many states are to be invited to join Canada this summer in a series of fetes marking the 400th anniversary of her discovery by Jacques Cartier, a bold French mariner who was trying to find a new route to the spice lands of Asia. Just 400 years ago the French discoverers landed on the beautiful Gaspé peninsula in Quebec, and, sailing up the St. Lawrence, were the first white men to visit the gorgeous Saguenay, the picturesque island of Orleans, the present sites of Montreal and Quebec City, the Lachine rapids and other spots noted among tourists. The United States is asked to participate because this discovery started the French exploration of a vast area of the continent, including the Mississippi Valley and the American Northwest. Fetes are to be held at Gaspe and other cities in the St. Lawrence Valley accessible by modern highways. Picture shows the Cartier high relief on the new Provincial Museum in Quebec City.

he reached the Island of Orleans, 1 in the Kingdom of "Canada," their word for village.

Still hunting China, in a long boat he reached the Indian village of Hochelaga, site of Montreal, but stopped at the Lachine Rapids, after climbing Mount Royal. During the disastrous winter near Quebec, when many of his men died of scurvy, he still tried to learn more of the marvellous Saguenay country, and decided that the way to get there was up the Ottawa River. In 1541 Cartier was back again with a still larger expedition and anchored at Cap Rouge, nine miles from the present Quebec City. Later came the seigneur de Roberval, who was to be in general command of the expedition and who was to try to ascend the Ottawa River to the reported land of riches in the Saguenay region. In 1543 Car- vellous highway system which

Because of the historic importance of the Cartier discoveries, both France and the Unitful spots in Canada, Huron-Iro- ed States will join in observance of the anniversary. A distinguished French delegation will participate in the ceremonies at Gaspe and then retrace the historic route of Cartier up the St. Lawrence. Both the American Government and many state governments are to be invited because later French explorers traversed so much of the continent now the United States. Champlain, La Salle, Joliet, Hen-nepin, La Vérendrye—the list of these explorers is almost endless and they explored more of North America in that period than any other race. And what they found turned out to be more marvellous than Cathay itself. In memory of the past, Gaspe peninsula and the St. Lawrence Valley will be a land of fetes this summer in honor of the great discoverers and thousands of visitors are expected along the martier made his last trip to take links together all the historic spots of past centuries.
