Plans Advanced for New Army of Greater Size

Attempt to Bring United States Forces to First Rank Pushed by High Command.

Washington.—Alarmed by glaring deficiencies in manpower and equipment, the war department is rushing completion of a far-reaching plan to lift the army from seventeenth place to first rank in power.

How far the department will succeed in strengthening the army, now declared by Chief of Staff General MacArthur to be "below the danger line" will depend solely upon congress, which will be asked to appropriate the necessary funds.

The program, it was revealed, will call for adequate motorization of all mobile units; modern combat equipment such as semi-automatic rifles and long range field guns; increases in personnel, and facilities for training officers and men.

War department officials declined to disclose how much they will need to finance the program, but expressed hope the administration, eager to assure adequate national defense, will approve the plans and furnish the necessary money.

At present, twenty years after the start of the world war, the United States army is relatively weaker than it was just before this country entered the conflict. High ranking officers revealed the army is almost totally lacking in up to date rifles, tanks, field artillery, anti-aircraft guns and gas masks.

Munitions reserves have dropped so low they would not last six weeks if the United States suddenly had to face an emergency. One of the chief worries of the war department is that the troops have had little or no target practice because of the shortage of ammunition.

One of the weakest plates in the army's defensive armor is the lack of proper motorization. Recommendations in the war department program will include addition of a large number of motorized fighting units which will largely replace the obsolescent cavalry, for reconnaissance and actual combat.

General MacArthur, in his last report to Secretary of War Dera, emphasized the need for tanks, of which the United States has fewer than any of the leading powers.

CEDAR IN DROUTH CLASS

Cedar county became the second far northeastern Nebraska county to request emergency drouth classification. The request went forward to Washington for approval. Myrie White, agricultural agent at Hartington who telegraphed the formal report to Prof. H. J. Gramlich, state director of federal cattle buying, indicated the request was asked primarily to farmers there can have the benefit of emergency feed loans.

Increased momentum in the drive to get farmers to conserve all possible roughages was noted in reports reaching Gramlich from outstate. Practically every farmer in the eastern section is now in the cornfields with binders cutting damaged corn for ensilage or fodder. Rudolph Kaliff, prominent York livestock feeder, told Gramlich that he had bought 75 tons of ensilage from a Colfax county farmer for $5 per ton, delivered to his farm.

Pramlich put his support behind the movement to all get CCC recruits to dig trench silos and help conserve damaged corn.

Mr. and Mrs. John L. Tidball and family who have been at Chicago for a short visit at the exposition, have returned home after a very pleasant outing.

Michael Hild, who was visiting with friends in Colorado, has returned to his home here. He made the trip in company with his son, Emil J. Hild and family, of Council Bluffs.
