BEHIND the SCENES in HOLLYWOOD

HOLLYWOOD—Next time Joel McCrea tells a fish story, he'll be better prepared to prove it. Sheepishly, the R-K-O star tells of how he cooked up a ruse to fool his Hollywood friends, but had the tables turned on him when two game wardens refused to see the point of the joke.

Joel McCrea

Unfortunately, he caught no fish. He seemed to be in for plenty of ribbing. Until he remembered Noah Beery's trout farm. Stopping there on the way home, he caught a creel-full in an hour. But instead of using the regular Beery cartons, he packed the fish in a box carrying the name of the Owens Valley camp.

What he didn't know was that two game wardens had a barricade in Mint Canyon. They discovered Joel with more than the limit and saw the camp's name on the box. In vain the star tried to explain that it was all a joke. He was all but arrested when one of the wardens finally agreed to go back to Beery's resort with him and confirm the story.

Evelyn Venable's father is moving in with her, and her friends see this as the end of her romance with Hal Mohr, Fox cameraman. Professor Venable was responsible for that contract in which the starlet was forbidden to play screen love scenes. He has threatened several times to take his daughter out of the movies and is known to have disapproved of Evelyn's real life romance. Since he came to Hollywood a while back, the professor has lived in an apartment while Evelyn took a house in Hollywood with a companion and a housekeeper. Now the companion is no longer with her. She'll have her father for company.

Tennis-mad Hollywood will be interested to learn that John Lodge's ancestors were among the earliest patrons of the sport in this country. In fact, the second lawn tennis court in America was built on the estate of John's grandfather, Henry Cabot Lodge, at Nahant, Mass.

Talking pictures are helping to change the classic lexicon of music. The conductor of a studio recording orchestra doesn't talk in terms of arpeggios, staccatos and so forth.

Herbert Stothart, who directed the 100 piece orchestra for M. G. M.'s "The Merry Widow," gives samples of the new glossary.

To get a quick staccato chord at the end of a strain, the studio conductor snaps: "Give me a stinger on the ending."

"Hwaans" are the long sustained notes of a French horn.

"Bumps" are the noises made by puffing into a brass tuba. They sound a bit like the chug of a locomotive. In fact, Ernst Lubitsch once used them for that in a memorable musical sequence on a train.

"Slaps are performed by slapping the mouth-piece of a tuba with the hand. Low bass notes are "grunts." A bass viol is a "dog house."

Knick-Knacks—

Kent Taylor was an eye-witness to the slaying of that bank bandit on Wilshire boulevard. And admits it made him squeamish. . . . I printed that Edna May Oliver bought a house but that doesn't half tell the story.

Sally Blane

She made the purchase, furnished it complete and moved in in three days. . . . Stay-out-laters at the Coconut Grove blinked to see Spencer Tracy at the same table with Sally Blane. But Sally's official escort was one of the other two men at the table. . . . Adela Rogers Hyland, her brother, Bogart Rogers, and Enzo Piermonte also listening to Gus Arnheim's music and Gene Austin's crooning at the Grove. . . . Ida Lupino's ma celebrated her twentieth wedding anniversary recently. . . . Gail Patrick's latest escort is William Mellor, the cameraman on her picture. They were at the El Rey club together. . . . Sheila Terry and John Warburton see things the same way—most of the time. . . . The Artie Stebbins have been showing the late spots to Dr. and Mrs. Maurice Kahn. . . . And Gloria Shea is still Winslow Felix's steady.
