Born in Pyuntytown, Virginia, January 26, 1855, son of Dr. Amos Payne and Elizabeth Barton Payne, great grandson of Francis Payne, who served as an ensign in the Revolutionary war.

John Barton Payne knew what hardship was. The armies of the north and south surged across this part of Virginia and the Payne family was forced to leave their home in Pruntytown, going to the old homestead of his father at Orleans. In 1862 this house was occupied by General Burnside as his headquarters and the farm became the camp of the army of the Potomac. The family lived by cultivating the land back from the highways, safe from passing troops. The mother and daughters wove cloth. Cane was used for sugar, parched rye for coffee, raspberry leaves for tea. The war left the country stripped and desolate. Not enough rails could be found to enclose a garden plot. Schools could not be maintained. Dr. Payne's eldest daughter taught the other sisters and the brothers, ten in all.

His first job was at the age of 15 as clerk in a general store at Warrenton, Virginia, receiving $50 salary for the first year and $150 for the second, 26 months without losing a day. Next at 18 given management of general store, railroad station, and post office at Thoroughfare Gap. Va., for nine months. Then became clerk of circut court at Pruntytown within a short distance of his birthplace. Every evening was spent in study in the law library. Later he worked in a sawmill and store management of both, continuing his law study every night. Was in the sawmill he received injury to his left hand, crippling several fingers.

In 1876 during the Tilden-Hayes campaign, young Payne became chairman of the Taylor county Democratic campaign committee. By this time his study of law brought him to the point where he thought he could pass the bar examination. He received admission to the bar Sept. 1876, circuit court at Pruntytown and immediate assignment to a case without pay. Moved to Preston county, practicing in Kingwood six years, formed many lasting friendships, expressed in appointment as chairman of the Preston county Democratic com- warden of the Ohio penitentiary for served as mayor of Kingwood.
