BELIEVE PROWLER WOUNDED

Omaha.—Police Sunday were seeking a prowler whom Kenneth Dagerman said he believed he wounded when he bumped into the man as he escaped after robbing his father's grocery, the Ten-Mile Inn, on west Dodge st. about midnight Saturday.

A burglar alarm set off by the prowler awakened Dagerman at his home a block away. Seizing a pistol, Dagerman raced to the store and collided with the robber, who floored the proprietor's son with a blow to the head. Dagerman fired at the fleeing man, who dropped his sack of plunder, containing groceries and merchandise.

The Sunporch Serves as Splendid Greenhouse

With Very Simple Equipment a Generous Supply of Seedlings May Be Grown.

The gardner who possesses a sunporch thriflyly prepares about this time for a supply of annuals for next summer's bloom. By ordering his seeds betimes and starting sowing by the middle of February, he can have on hand by the first of May a stock of fine husky plants which will fill his garden with color and his soul with pride, and be no strain whatever on his pocketbook.

The sunporch which the writer possesses is only eleven by seventeen feet but in it each year are raised about 2,000 seedlings which were transplanted to the borders are the glory of the garden from Spring until late Autumn.

The equipment needed for sunporch gardening is simple and inexpensive. Eight seed flats are ample as they can be used for a second sowing after the first crop of seedlings has been shifted to other quarters. A flat 12 inches square and three inches deep is a convenient size for handling and can be made at home from wood obtained ready cut at the mill. Six pieces 12 inches long are required for the bottom and two sides, and two pieces 11 inches long for the other two sides—all pieces 3 inches wide and half inch thick. It is well to give the flats a coat of paint, both inside and out, as preservative and also to make them a decorative part of the sunporch picture.

Twelve inch squares of glass and cardboard are desirable as covering for the flats during germination—the glass to conserve the moisture and the cardboard to shut out the light. For larger flats, in which to transplant the seedlings, flat fruit boxes may be obtained from the grocery—and these may also be painted inside and out. For later transplanting, 2 and 3-inch flower pots are employed. These are inexpensive when bought by the hundred and it is well to be plentifully supplied. The only additional utensils needed are a fairly fine sieve, a soil leveler, a pair of tweezers and a fine bulb spray.

To Keep Plants Near the Glass A row of benches or shelves running the length of the room along the glass sashes or windows of the porch will be needed to hold the flats and pots, which must be as near the sunlight as possible if the seedlings are to thrive.

In preparing the seed flats, a layer of broken crock is first put in, as a drainage precaution; this being covered with sphagnum moss, which absorbs and holds moisture, and a sprinkling of charcoal to prevent acidity. The flat is then filled with loam to within an inch of the top and a half inch of sifted soil—equal parts of loam and sand—is added and pressed down with the leveler. After filling each flat is thoroughly soaked with boiling water to sterilize the soil and to supply moisture during germination. This is best applied with a "rose spray" on the watering can which waters evenly and packs the earth firmly.

After allowing the flat to stand for a few hours for the earth to settle, a layer of dirt soil is sifted over the surface, the seeds evenly scattered on this, pressed lightly with the leveler, dusted over with a sifting of dry soil, and pressed firmly down to insure close contact of the seeds with the earth. The quantity of soil used for covering the seeds depends entirely on their size—a safe rule to follow is to cover seeds to a depth of their own size. The use of the leveler for firming the soil after the seeds are sown is most important, as the close contact of the seeds and soil is absolutely essential to germination.

The flat is then covered with glass and cardboard and, if "bottom heat" is called for on the seed packet, is placed over or close to the radiator. It is amazing how quickly many seeds will germinate in this position. Verbenas will come up in three days and Zinnias in nineteen hours! On account of the difference in the time of germination of the different seeds, it is advisable to sow only one kind of flower in each flat. If a lower temperature is indicated as a necessary factor in the germination of certain varieties, those flats can be placed on the floor in a shaded part of the room. If the soil has been thoroughly soaked with boiling water before sowing the seeds, the flat usually will not need watering again until after germination. It is well to watch the covering glass and reverse it when moisture gathers on the under side. As soon as germination starts, the glass

MAY RESUME RIVER WORK

Nebraska City—The Missouri river improvement work may be resumed late next week if balmy weather of the past few days continues and gives ice a chance to break up, contractors here say. The thin covering of ice over the Missouri will be broken up by the middle of next week, they believe, and work could then be opened within a few days. The last two weeks' mild weather has greatly softened the ice.

A big rise in the river may occur when the ice breaks up, however, it was pointed out, as recent snows and rains at the headwaters of the river will be released. Such a rise would place unfinished dikes and re-ventments in a precarious position. Even tho the rise might be dangerous to such uncompleted work, it is being hailed with delight by contractors, for it will improve working conditions which were handicapped last year by low water.

is lifted slightly to allow a current of air to pass through, and when germination is completed, both glass and cardboard are removed.

Sun Baths for Little Seedlings

The flat may now be placed on a bench close to the sash where the baby seedlings can bask in the sunlight all day; but they will demand faithful watering, as to let them dry out even once will be fatal. There can be no fixer rule about watering seedlings. On cloudy days they may not need watering, whereas on a bright, sunny day several sprinklings will be gratefully accepted. Care must be taken, even when using the bulb spray, that the force of the water hits the soil and not the plant, as seedlings raised in the house are even more delicate than those raised in the open and must be handled with the greatest care.

If there be a generous germination and consequent crowding, the seedlings are at once thinned out, with the use of the tweezers. After the thinning out has been accomplished, fine dry sand sifted over the soil to the depth of at least a quarter of an inch is a valuable aid in the care of the tiny plants, as it helps to prop up the slender stems and at the same time keeps the earth around the roots moist and cool.

When the seedlings have developed three or more true leaves they may be transplanted to the larger flat, and later, when they have become real plants, may be put into the two or three inch pots—the size of the pot being determined by the size of the root. By this time they will be ready for the richer soil, so a compost of one-half humus, one-quarter loam and one-quarter sand may be used, and once a week they may be given a watering of very weak liquid manure or one of the complete commercial plant foods. After any transplanting plants must be shaded from the sun to prevent wilting.

The soil of both flats and pots will need careful watching to see that it does not dry out and fresh air must be supplied each day, care being taken that it does not blow directly on the seedlings. As plants on a sunporch receive light from one side only and as all plants naturally bend toward the sun, it is necessary to turn both flats and pots frequently to keep the plants upright. After seedlings have developed and the stems have strengthened the foliage may be sprinkled each day. On bright, sunny days, it is well to spray, not only the plants, but the benches of the sashes and the floor, if it be masonry, to help keep the air moist.

Combating the Aphis

Certain types of plants are particularly susceptible to the attacks of that arch enemy of the gardener—the aphis. But these pests may be easily controlled if discouraged at the outset by a thorough spraying of a weak solution of Black Leaf 40 and soap suds, the proportion being a teaspoonful of Black Leaf to a gallon of warm soapy water.

It is possible to raise almost any annual in the house, but those that seem to thrive especially well under sunporch conditions are Ageratum, Antirrhinum, Aster, Calceola, Annual Pink, Myosotis, Heliotrop, Mignonne, Petunia, Lobelia, Verbena and Zinia.

In the vicinity of New York it is unwise to set the plants out in the borders before the first week in May and by this time the seedlings will have grown into fine husky little plants, many of them of blooming size. If they are carefully removed from the pot without disturbing the roots, placed immediately in holes which have been prepared in advance and kept plentifully supplied with water for the first few days they will settle down contentedly in their new homes and burst into bloom a month or six weeks earlier than if the seeds had been sown in the open ground.—By Catherine B. Storm in the New York Times.
