Death of Former Resident of Cass County Occurs

Mrs. Frank E. Doud Passes Away at the Family Home at Bloomington, Nebraska, Feb. 3rd.

The following from the Bloomington, (Neb.) Advocate, tells of the death of Mrs. Frank E. Doud, a resident of this community some forty-five years ago and who is well known to many of the old time residents. The deceased lady is the mother of Ralph Doud of near this city:

The citizens of this place were shocked on the first of the week to learn of the sudden death of Mrs. Frank E. Doud which occurred on Sunday night from a stroke. The deceased had suffered several strokes during the past year or so. She was up and around the day previous and no one surmised the end was so near:

Minnie Carroll, the eldest daughter of Thomas J. Carroll, born at Decatur, Ill., Sept. 12, 1868, died at Bloomington, Neb., Feb. 3, 1935, at the age of 66 years, 4 months and 22 days. She was left motherless at a tender age, being loved and cared for by her grandmother, aunt and second mother, as only good women can care for a little child.

She came to Franklin county in 1873, where she practically spent her entire life. She was married to Frank E. Doud, at Shenandoah, Iowa, in September, 1890.

She has seen all the vicissitudes from the days of the buffalo and covered wagon to our present day of the automobile and radio. She has given all the love and care which only a mother can give to her five children, four of which have survived her, Ralph and wife of Plattsmouth, Nebr.; Keitha Swanda and husband of Omaha; Wayne Doud, wife and children, Barbara and Francis, also of Omaha; Ruth Osterbohr and husband of Franklin; also two others, Elizabeth Matz and Nellie Redcliff, of McCook, who spent their girlhood school days under her loving care. She is also survived by three brothers and her husband. Two sisters having gone before.

Such is the simple story of one life, but it tells nothing of the happy carefree life of the child, nothing of the visions of her young girlhood, nothing of the hopes and ambitions of the matron, nor the anxieties for her babies ill or in health, it tells nothing of the watchful hours with neighbors in sickness and death, nor the pleasures given in doing these acts. These are the things that cannot be written and live only in the memories of those who look back into the past. This is the story of thousands of pioneer women who have labored with love and have when through only the Christ who has given the example and does reward, whose only monument is the memory of these deeds long past.

The funeral was held Monday afternoon in the Methodist church, conducted by Rev. L. L. Blauvelt, the pastor.

New Construction Methods to Benefit Builders

Steel and Wood Connectors Are Part of Plan to Use Wood in Bridge Construction Work.

With the completion in Europe of the world's highest wooden structure, built of American woods—a radio tower 628 ft.—wood construction is entering upon a period of renaissance unequalled in its previous history, according to Axel H. Oxholm, Chief, Forest Products Division, Department of Commerce. Age old wood construction methods, placing serious limitations in the way of the use of this material, have been superseded by a combination of steel and wood construction employing steel connectors at the principal joints, thereby increasing the strength of the structure from four to eight times compared with the old-fashioned bolted joints heretofore used. This system is making remarkable headway in the United States, according to Mr. Oxholm. The state of California has just completed several highway wooden bridges of spans up to 180 feet with the total length up to 530 feet. These bridges were constructed with considerable economy as compared with previous construction methods. This construction method, introduced into the United States through the combined efforts of the Department of Commerce and the Department of Agriculture, was demonstrated to the highway engineers of the country at the national convention of road builders, just held in Washington, D. C.

This modern connector system will have particular application in the nation wide program for the elimination of grade crossings, according to Oxholm. In Germany he says, one engineering concern alone is steadily employing 1,400 carpenters in erecting such wooded structures, and yet Germany does not have any native woods which can compare with our structural woods in strength and durability. This joint strengthening device is now spreading into our industrial field, and the railroads of the country are studying its application for railroad car construction, platforms, station buildings, and many other purposes.

Our radio engineers are keenly interested in these wooden towers because the use of wood and a special type of connectors has increased radio efficiency up to 25 percent. In the small house construction field, these connectors, unquestionably, will play an important part, because they will enable the builder to secure greater efficiency and strength from the wooden members of the structure, and at the same time, double the rigidity. This, in turn, will have a tendency to decrease plaster cracks and other similar defects common in this type of structure. It is my belief, says Oxholm, that these modern connectors will give a powerful impetus to semi-fabricated houses because their use will greatly simplify the erection problem.

DRY LANDS SHELTERBELTS

Washington.—Pronounced benefits from experimental dry lands shelterbelts started as demonstrations were reported by Knowles A. Ryerson, chief of the federal bureau of plant industry. Success of farmers co-operating with the federal government in experiments, he said in his annual report to Secretary Wallace, showed protected gardens fared better than those exposed to the gusty winds of the great plains. "High winds," he reported, "are the rule in the entire great plains area, and farm homes, gardens and orchards require protection. To provide this protection, the stations at Mandan, N. D.; Cheyenne, Wyo., and Woodward, Okl., have undertaken demonstrations of shelterbelt plantings."

SUDDEN ENDING OF ROMANCE

Washington.—The marriage of the former Jane Cooke of Chevy Chase, Mr., and the family chauffeur, George Scarlett, appeared headed for dissolution as it was revealed the bride was planning a divorce or annulment action. The 20 year old wife, who disappeared Friday while her husband was in court in Rockville, Md., facing an unsuccessful theft charge brought by her mother, Mrs. Howard De Walden Cooke, remained in hiding. But a Washington attorney disclosed that she had retained him with a view to ending the marriage.

Going Out of Business.

The Earl Lancaster store, which is the property of Earl Lancaster, will begin a sale on Saturday of this week to close out all the stock, as he has other interests demanding all his attention and after considering the matter carefully he sees no other way but to close out the entire stock. On the coming Saturday he will open the doors of his place of business, with nothing reserved. He has arranged the store so that customers may have an opportunity to select just what they may want. A large list of goods has been listed and an ad appears in this issue of the Journal, and in addition the entire portion of the county within driving range of Murray is being billed that all who desire may have an equal and fair opportunity to be there when the sale starts. Nothing will be reserved, as he is going out of business and the sooner the stock is disposed of the better.
