Two Men Killed as Motor Train Strikes a Truck

W. A. Stark and Charles Lathrop, Believed of Cambridge, Victims of Collision at Fremont

Fremont, May 26.—Two men, identified as W. A. Stark, about 26, and Charles Lathrop, 45, apparently both of Cambridge, Neb., were killed near here Sunday afternoon in the collision of their truck and a Burlington motor train.

The truck, loaded with cattle, was struck broadside by the motor train and was carried about 200 feet down the tracks. Stark was killed instantly and Lathrop died a few minutes after the accident.

Meanwhile, hundreds of persons gathered at the intersection, blocking traffic on the Lincoln highway and impeding the work of trainmen.

Windows in the train cab were shattered and glass was thrown into the engineer's room, but Engineer Henry C. Burleigh, of Lincoln, escaped unhurt.

Authorities were checking the possibility Lathrop might be from Indianola, Neb., since a bill of sale dated at Indianola was found in his pocket.

Rain and Cold Check Moths in the Orchards

Condition is Favorable to Scab, However, Horticulturist Warns—Foresee Good Crop.

The cold rainy weather during the past weeks has been extremely unfavorable for codling moths in the orchard section of Nebraska according to E. H. Hoppert, extension horticulturist at the college of agriculture.

The weather has been decidedly favorable, however, to the development of scab. Fungicide applied during the calyx spray will probably remain effective ten days to two weeks after application, but probably not until the time comes for the first cover spray for the codling moth.

Weather has been favorable for shot hole fungus on cherries, Hoppert adds, "and black rot on grapes. Use liquid lime sulphur 1 1/2 gallons to 50 for shot hole fungus and Bordeaux 3-4-50 on the grapes when the new shoots are 8 inches long.

Will Test Soybeans, Forage and Sorghum. Many Varieties of Each are Being Planted in Order to Compare Yields Over the State. Testing of approved varieties of soybeans, corn and forage and grain sorghums on numerous Nebraska farms for comparative yields and local adaptation was announced from the college of agriculture at Lincoln this last week. Five big corn variety tests will be planted this week and next in five different counties. P. H. Stewart, extension agronomist, said. The plantings are to be made on the farms of Arch Hostermann, Auburn; Amos Gramlich, Fort Crook; Honor Ochsner, Madison; Vernon Euhling, Oakland, and Ernest Peterson, Concord. Thirty-five varieties, mostly hybrids, are being put in each plot. Farm and experiment station results in past years indicate that the better hybrids will outyield superior corn varieties by about 15 per cent and Nebraska farmers apparently will watch the 1935 tests to compare the results. The better hybrids have a more erect and stiffer stalk and produce a more uniform stand, results show. In addition to the five big tests, farmers in ten different counties are also co-operating with the experiment station in comparing 15 hybrids and varieties with local corn. Fifteen varieties will be used in each plot and will be planted at the usual local rate. The exact location of these tests is to be announced later, according to Stewart. Increasing interest in growing of sorghum is being followed by a comparison of fifteen different varieties in twenty different counties where farmers are co-operating with their local agricultural agents and the experiment station in the project. Most of the tests are being put in the south Platte territory. Five varieties of soybeans have already been planted in fifteen counties, mostly in the southeastern and northern counties. In another project, thirty Nebraska farmers are co-operating in comparing foundation atlas sorgo with other varieties. The seed will be eligible to certification and help produce a "pure" atlas seed in the state. More than 200 acres of the foundation atlas will be planted by the thirty co-operators. ALTITUDE RECORD. TIFIS, U. S. S. R.—The world's altitude record both for glider and air train was claimed after the ascent of a soviet plane with an attached glider to a height of 6,100 meters (19,983 feet). The glider was detached at that altitude and glided sixty kilometers to a landing field. Ten million more for river development insure new contracts and a navigable channel to Sioux City within the coming two years.
