Plan Revival of Shelterbelt as a Drouth Barrier

Money is Available in Spite of Congress Veto—Grant Drouth Aid to Iowa and Nebraska.

Washington.—Morris Cooke, chairman of President Roosevelt's great plains drouth committee, said the administration is considering reviving the abandoned "shelterbelt" of trees as a part of its long range drouth prevention program. Disclosing that the committee had discussed the project at its meeting earlier Friday, Cooke said it was "not dead, but very active."

Questioned as to the failure of congress to provide money for continuing the tree planting venture, Cooke said some money still is available out of previous allocations. Planting of belts of trees running from north to south across the middlewest was undertaken by the administration previously with the expressed hope of holding the soil and changing climatic conditions.

With a program for adding the smaller farmers in the drouth area underway, and long range rehabilitation studies launched, federal officials turned to the puzzling problem of helping big farm operators who cannot qualify as "desitute." From the northwest cattle country and the great lakes dairy sections arose a new call for government assistance in financing huge herds, owners of which do not come under current relief classifications.

Responding to requests by Governors Cochran and Herring, federal officials agreed to cash and work relief for drouth impoverished farmers in Iowa and Nebraska, the program to be decided upon at later conferences. Iowa was added to the officially designated drouth states by an order listing 35 counties for emergency treatment. Nebraska, previously on the list, received allocations of $75,000 in loans and $25,000 in grants from rehabilitation funds. Officials announced that employment of destitute farmers in mid-western and western states by the WPA had exceeded 35,000. Thirty-one counties in the three states were added to the PWA emergency drouth area list and new water conservation projects were outlined for Kansas, Nebraska and Missouri.

1. The RA announced allocation of additional loans of $975,000 and grants of 7512,000 for drouth relief in Minnesota, Missouri, Kentucky, Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Colorado, Wyoming, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, Georgia and Arkansas.

2. The WPA added Missouri to the list of states receiving extra work allotments because of the drouth and authorized immediate jobs for 3,000 needy farmers.

3. The Montana board of railway commissioners asked Governor Holt of that state and the interstate commerce commission for a reduction of at least 50 percent in freight rates on feed concentrates.

4. The department of agriculture added barley in the upper Mississippi valley to the list of feed grains definitely reduced in harvest prospects by heat and the drouth.

5. Farmers were warned to keep
