Hoppers Ready to Hop.

Precinct Farm Bureau chairmen are meeting at the Farm Bureau office in Weeping Water this week to lay plans for a county wide campaign for hopper control.

Rains, showers and drizzles during the past two weeks have done little to handicap the expected grasshopper invasion in Cass county and as a result farmers are on the lookout for hatchings of the pest which may do considerable damage to crops.

Warm or moderately cool, drizzling showers do not destroy baby hoppers. Rather it takes hard, heavy, beating rains. The disastrous effect of such heavy beating rains to young grasshoppers was illustrated 5 years ago in northeastern Nebraska. There drenching rains in May after the hoppers had hatched out killed the majority of them.

The backward spring here though has delayed hatching of the eggs. Some reports have been received at the Farm Bureau office of hatchings but they are not widespread as yet. Hatching over the state has been spotted and Prof. M. H. Swenk of the college of agriculture does not believe the majority of the hoppers will be hatched before one to two weeks yet.

Natural Resource Conservation.

What has your club, or you, done in conservation work? Remember that fifty trips, forty to club members and ten for 4-H club leaders, will be awarded for Conservation Camp. Reports of activities must be filed before July 1 with the county extension agents to be eligible to compete for one of these free trips.

Two new bulletins are just off the press printed by the Nebraska Game, Forestation and Parks commission. Bulletin No. 5, "Insects of Nebraska," and Bulletin No. 6, "Conservation of Moisture and Soil" and "Upland Game Restoration," by G. W. McCullough, Wild Life Technician of the Federal Cartridge Corporation. These bulletins are available upon request, as well as other material on wild life and natural resources conservation. If you will let the agents know what line of activities you are interested in, suitable material will be sent to individuals making such request.

Finds Good Use for Cellophane.

Here's an idea I saw being used in one of our busy farm homemakers the other day: Her home had just been freshly painted and papered so under and around the most used light switches, the places where dad, son, and small daughter were just as likely to punch the clean wall as the light switch, she had placed clear cellophane. Now, let 'em punch where they please, the wallpaper will stay clean, the cellophane can be changed as needed, and the family disposition is saved.

Planting Hybrid Corn Tests.

Cass county farmers will be able to make a direct comparison between hybrid corn and open pollinated varieties this year, it has been announced, as plans are being completed for planting a cooperative test on a farm in this county.

Sponsored by the Cass County Farm Bureau, a total of fifteen of the best hybrids known in Nebraska will be seeded in the test along with five different open pollinated varieties. The corn all will be planted at the same time and at the same rate in the same field. Next fall

DO YOU KNOW—

That furniture, some of it of very elaborate workmanship, was in use in Egypt at least 4000 years B.C. There are still in existence beds and chairs dating from 1500 B.C. Egyptian furniture was made of ebony, cedar, sycamore, acacia and other woods, inlaid with ivory, precious metals and glass.

farmers will be invited to visit the demonstration and inspect the varieties and hybrids.

The best hybrids in past years have yielded approximately 15 per cent better than the best open pollinated varieties in cooperative tests held over the state. Cass county farmers have heard a great deal about the advisability of growing hybrids and as a result are taking unusual interest in the tests this year.

Similar tests are being sponsored by Farm Bureaus in thirty-five other Nebraska counties.

Corn Planting Time.

Given more favorable spring weather, Cass county farmers will be in the field planting their 1937 corn crop which they hope will turn to be a "bumper" one. Reports received at the Farm Bureau office indicate an increased acreage this year in comparison with 1936.

Many cultural practice questions have arisen in the minds of farmers during the past week. Early planting versus late planting has been debated some. A great many producers this year plan to "hedge" against reduced yields by planting part of their crop early and part of it late.

Experimental work at the Nebraska station at Lincoln over a period of years shows planting from May 1 to June 5 produced essentially the same yields.

In some years early planting is best. Listing and surface planting at the Nebraska station have also given about the same yields, according to Dr. T. A. Kieselbach. Probably by far the big proportion of the 1937 corn crop here will be planted from adopted seed. Farmers have found that they are repaid for planting seed which they know about. It has been found at Lincoln that corn from the extreme southeastern part of the state ripens on an average 11 days later when grown at Lincoln than corn from northeastern Nebraska; and 30 days later than seed obtained from the western part of the state.

Ward Love, 16, of Anderson, Ind., named state and national champion, had kept records for three years. Changes suggested by it were instituted which helped to raise the returns substantially above the state averages compiled by Purdue University.

Merton Sutter, 19, of Fountain City, Wis., designated state champion, and also winner of sectional honors relinquished by the Love boy, had kept accounts for three years on 115 acres which showed marked improvement in dairy and alfalfa production and suggested ways of raising poultry returns.

Oscar J. Kern, 19, of Stillwater, Minn., won state honors on records kept on his father's 530-acre farm, which showed that livestock made money when crops did not. William J. Vondrasek, 16, of Mesick, Mich., won state honors on a record kept on 99 acres farmed by his father, which suggested the use of electric light to increase eggs, grinding grain for livestock, raising more beets and alfalfa hay and siloing for corn.

Ruth L. Ott, 16, Wichita, Kans., won state honors on a record kept on her father's 260-acre farm, which settled a controversy over a $50.00 item, revealed that the dairy had made a profit in spite of the drought, and focused attention on such fixed charges as taxes, interest and labor. Alvin Kuhl, 21, of Davenport, Iowa, state winner, showed that livestock returns on his father's 160-acre farm were well up in the high group, averaging $170.00 for each $100.00 worth of feed.

Arnold L. Norskov, 19, of Loretto, Neb., was named state champion on a record kept on 160 acres farmed by his father. Brought into use to conserve impaired resources due to recent crop failures, the record showed how to reduce operating costs through purchasing a tractor and making greater use of livestock. Each state winner received $100 in merchandise, the sectional winner a $225.00 prize and the national winner a $500.00 award all provided by the International Harvester company, sponsor of the contest, which is being conducted again this year throughout the nation.

Small factories will find welcome and the opportunity to expand (through river transportation) in Plattsmouth.
