A Burden for Some Stranger

By IRVIN S. COBB

BOB DAVIS was a sport-writer and fancier of pugilism. When Fitzsimmons was getting ready to fight Corbett for the heavy-weight championship in 1897, Davis, as staff correspondent for a big city paper was sent to Carson to cover the story. It was for him a congenial assignment. He liked prizefighters and he had spent his boyhood in

He made his headquarters at Fitz's training camp where he speedily distinguished himself, among other things as, a sincere and eager trencherman. He was brilliant at all times but at meal-times he especially shone, even against spirited competition from a crew of handlers

On morning he went with Fitz for an exercise spin over a country road. As the two Bobs trotted along, the fighter presently drew ahead.

"Hurry up!" he shouted back over his shoulder. "I don't feel so well," answered Davis.
"What's the matter?" inquired the Cornishman.

"I've lost my appetite," said Davis, between pants.
