Wabash News

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Schlueter and Mr. and Mrs. William Rueter, who attended the church convention at Milford last week, returned home on Monday and report a very worthwhile gathering.

Howard Richards, who plans to sow more wheat than last year, has the ground about plowed in readiness for the crop. He thinks wheat pays a better return, with less uncertainty and less hard work than required in the production of a corn crop.

The Wabash Community Kensington club met last Wednesday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Keith Munford, considering some re-arrangement in their work, which they plan to have cover a greater scope than heretofore. This club is one of the most active in the county.

Although Louis Schmidt has not been feeling any too well of late, the demand for pit silos has caused him to carry on without a letdown, as he might well have done. Among those getting new silos are Fred and Gus Stock and Otto Reickman. At later reports, however, Mr. Schmidt became so ill he had to give up work for a few days, whether he wanted to or not.

Floyd W. Stratton, formerly of Weeping Water, moved to Wabash last week and the family is located in the Munford property. While only a "little runt" in stature, Floyd is a very capable quarryman, and is able to crack stone with any of them. He has had long experience in that line of work and is continuing his job with the government quarry east of Weeping Water.

Inspecting School Property
Miss Celsie Schlanker of near Elmwood, who is to teach the Wabash school the coming year, was in town last week making an inspection of the building and grounds in advance of the opening day.

Entertained for Dinner
Mr. and Mrs. Louis Schmidt, of Wabash, were host and hostess to a number of relatives for a dinner in honor of Mrs. Frank Eckery, who with her infant daughter have been visiting here and at Murdock for some time past and who departed from Ashland last Wednesday for her home at Hastings. Among those present on this occasion were Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Smith, parents of Louis Smith; Mr. and Mrs. William Winkler and their daughter of Elmwood and a number of other relatives.

Credited with Being Good Cook
P. H. Clarke, who is a good farmer and will not take a back seat for anyone in that line, has been picking grapes from which he is putting up a goodly supply of jelly—and he knows how to do that, too, in the same efficient and thorough manner he tackles any farming problem. All you housewives who pride yourselves on culinary ability, if puzzled over any cooking problem, just call on "P" and we feel sure he can help you out.

Child Receives Injury
Eileen, 15-months-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Patzel, was injured quite severely in an auto accident near the home of Walter Oehlerking, when the car swerved from the road and ran into a telephone pole. As the little girl was thrown against the wind shield, her collar bone was broken and she had to be taken to a Lincoln hospital for treatment by her grandfather, L. R. Stanley. The Patzel family had been visiting in this part of the state, and after a visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Stanley here, were leaving for Madison, Neb., to visit at the home of Mr. Patzel's parents at the time the accident occurred.

She is reported getting along as well as could be expected.

Cass county has no bonded indebtedness, as, like the state, we have paid cash for our hard surfaced roads and other improvements as we went.

They planned to visit Yellowstone park and surrounding country as much as possible, but both had to be back to work at the end of a week. One can see a lot in seven days, however, by keeping pretty much on the go.

Interested in Iowa
Having their interest attracted to certain farms near Leon, Iowa, that are being offered for sale by L. F. Fitch, George Eidenmiller and family and Mrs. Will Hayes made a trip to Leon last Sunday, going via the Missouri river bridge at Plattsmouth and east on U. S. 34 to Osceola. They visited Yellowstone park and some of the wild country out that way. They say it was very cool in Colorado, and at one place Charlie had to get up in the night and build a fire in the cabin as there was not sufficient bedding provided. They also visited the Black Hills, which they said do not possess near the beauty of the other places, being ragged with a great many broken forest trees.

They enjoyed every minute of their trip, but were pleased to get back to Cass county again.

John, Mary and Jack

DENTISTRY and PUBLIC HEALTH
Approved by American Dental Association and the United States Public Health Service
PLATTSMOUTH DENTAL SOCIETY

CHAPTER XXVII
By the time Jack Reynolds was six and a half years old, his upper and lower front baby teeth had become so loose that they were actually annoying.

"I think," said Mr. Reynolds, one evening, "that you had better take Jack to the dentist and have those teeth pulled out, the poor kid can't eat his meals."

"I can't bear to do it," replied his wife. "Those teeth should come out, I know, but you'll have to take him for me."

Knowing that argument on this occasion was useless, Mr. Reynolds gracefully accepted the task and immediately phoned Dr. Young for an appointment. Luckily, the dentist could see him that evening, so John wasted no time in having the ordeal over with. It took Dr. Young but a few minutes to administer a mild anaesthetic and remove the loose teeth. Owing to the anaesthesia, the operation was entirely painless, but for a few seconds Jack was a little frightened. Once convinced that the teeth were out, however, he flashed a broad, toothless smile at his father.

Father and son looked at the extracted teeth curiously. "That's strange," said Mr. Reynolds. "I thought baby teeth had roots just the same as permanent teeth."

"They do," replied the dentist, "for part of their life. However, by the time they are normally lost, their roots have disappeared."

"What becomes of the roots?" asked Mr. Reynolds.

"They are resorbed," answered the dentist. "The baby teeth live through an interesting life cycle. Their crowns are formed first; then the crowns push through the gums into the mouth and the roots are formed. By the age of two or two and one-half years, the roots of the baby front teeth are fully developed. In the meantime, the crowns of the permanent teeth begin to form in the jawbone beneath the baby teeth. As the crowns of the permanent teeth grow bigger, they press against the roots of the baby teeth. This pressure causes the roots of the baby teeth to dissolve and disappear. By the time the permanent teeth are large enough to push through the gums, the roots of the baby teeth have been completely dissolved and only the crown remains. Sometimes, the roots of the baby teeth do not dissolve properly. In that case, the permanent teeth may come in either in front of or behind the baby teeth. In that case, the baby teeth should be removed at once, as too long retention usually results in misplaced second teeth."
