Laughing Around the World With IRVIN S. COBB

A Voice from the Ranks

By IRVIN S. COEB

THE man from whom I got the yarn couldn't recall the name of the battle in which this thing occurred but he was quite sure it was one of the bloody fights of the final Virginia campaign shortly before Lee's surrender.

The general engagement had commenced. The brigade to which Captain Farinholt belonged was drawn up in reserve awaiting the command to advance, when a small battery of Union guns opened upon it from the top of a nearby hill, doing considerable damage. An order was given that Captain Farinholt's company should capture the battery and silence the bothersome guns.

This meant that unless some one devised a better plan, the detail must rush the hill by a frontal attack. It also meant that the little assaulting force must suffer heavy casualties even if it were not entirely decimated; for there was no cover. They must charge the enemy across an open space where the Federal pieces might play directly upon them. As the men awaited the word to advance, the company commander felt it his duty to advise them that this was a most desperate adventure on which they were about to start. His own instructions, he explained, were not specific. He merely had been told that he must eliminate those pestiferous Yanks. Then, departing somewhat from strict military discipline, he asked whether any individual present cared to make a suggestion whereby the enemy's battery could be taken with the least possible loss of life. A pause befell. No one, it seemed, could think of an easier way than the one already decided upon. A private, who stuttered badly, broke the silence:

"W-h-h-a-a-t say, fellers, l-e-e-s just c-h-i-p in a-n-d buy the
