There is No State Like Nebraska!

(From the Oklahoma City Times)

OKLAHOMA, the state where fabulous black gold pours from hundreds of wells—where natural resources are as great as any middle-western state possesses, is looking with envious eyes upon Nebraska and the frugality of administration that has set this commonwealth apart from all the others in the nation, having no bonded debt and none of the extra forms of taxation which so many of the states have turned to.

Perhaps you stopped to read with amazement an ad in one of several magazines of national circulation this month which presented Nebraska as the only state that has no income tax, no general sales tax and no cigarette tax—AND NO PUBLIC DEBT.

That news ought to be of paramount importance to Oklahomans, residents of one of the most overtaxed states in the union. Thrifty Nebraska, bidding for citizens because of its thrift and solvency, ought to be a fine example for profligate Oklahoma, where the public is complacent about a highway department that spends $6,000,000 in a year for things not directly a part of roadmaking, where a mounting deficit of a million a month creates no more excitement than the anticipated state deficit of $11,000,000 at the end of the present fiscal year.

There is some hope when one small middlewestern state can stick to the economics of our forefathers in a time of national squandermania. While the national deficit has been catapulted to the staggering peak of 37 billions and the current federal deficit is piling up at the rate of a billion every year, Nebraska continues on a cash basis. While Oklahoma is losing well-to-do residents by the score because of a confiscatory income tax rate (among the highest in the nation), Nebraska is gaining population because of a safe and solidly established system of business government.

You may wonder how Nebraska built that magnificent state capitol costing $10,000,000 without going into debt. That story typifies Nebraska's entire financial philosophy. It is based on pay-as-you-go economics. In 1875 the Nebraska constitution embodied a provision prohibiting the state from ever going into debt. A later constitutional convention reaffirmed this policy in 1920. In 1931 a bill was introduced for a constitutional amendment to permit the state to go into debt for roads, but the bill never passed the legislature.

Governor R. L. Cochran summarizes Nebraska's fiscal policy as follows:

- 1—Resistance to pressure groups seeking greater expenditures.
2—Constitutional and legislative limitations upon spending by local subdivisions of government.
3—Efficient administration.
4—Avoidance of new forms of taxes.
5—Pay-as-you-go plan adhered to for all state expenditures.

When Nebraska turned up with a million dollar deficit a few years ago the folks hit the ceiling. The next legislature passed a law making it mandatory for the state board of equalization to pass a levy sufficient to meet all appropriations. Nebraska legislators cannot indulge in the Oklahoma sport of voting for every appropriation sought by log rolling friends by passing the buck to the governor with the thought that he can veto the sum or find the money in some convenient hat.

Who can think up an effective method for getting the Nebraska brand of legislator down to Oklahoma for just one session?
