LONDON ACHIEVES TITLE, "SWITCHBOARD OF WORLD"

LONDON (UP)—London has become the "switchboard of the world." Only two countries of the world remain out of reach of the British postoffice telephone system—Albania, which has no system of external communication, and Malaya. In Malaya, experiments are being carried out by engineers, and it is expected that the country will be "phonable" within a year or so.

The London international exchange is the clearing station for telephone conversations from all parts of the globe and with ships at sea. There are more than 35,000,000 telephone users in the world—Great Britain has fewer than 3,500,000—but so well has the postoffice done its work that British subscribers can talk to 90 per cent of them.
