ing. He also ministered to the church at LaRue, Colorado, which recently celebrated its golden jubilee or fiftieth anniversary. Rev. Wigert and wife attended the celebration and enjoyed meeting many of the old time members. For four years he held the position of superintendent of the churches of this district.

NEAR RIOT IN EAST

Approximately 100 members of the Citizens' Anti-Nazi League, who had been picketing the hall before Kunze appeared, stormed the building in an attempt to break up the meeting. Nazi sympathizers, including a guard of uniformed "storm troopers," met the invaders with fists.

Several blackacks appeared, but the fight was halted before anyone was really hurt. More than 50 policemen dispersed the crowd and placed a guard around the hall. The band meeting was permitted to continue about an hour later. No arrests were made.

CHAPTER XLVII
"Do all people have wisdom teeth?" asked Jack Reynolds, as he settled himself in the dentist's chair.

Most adults get their wisdom teeth sooner or later," replied Dr. Young. "Occasionally, we find an individual whose wisdom teeth or third molars are missing. Such individuals are rare. Most of us receive our full complement of thirty-two teeth, including only four wisdom teeth, by the time we are twenty-one years of age."

"It is always a good policy," continued the dentist, "if the wisdom teeth have not erupted by that time to have the jaws x-rayed. X-ray pictures will show whether the third molars are present, but unerupted. unerupted wisdom teeth are usually impacted."

"What does that mean?" asked Jack. "When we speak of an impacted tooth, we mean one that is locked in the jaw in such a manner that it cannot erupt into position," answered the dentist. "The lower third molar is more frequently impacted than any other tooth. The lower third molars may become impacted because the other permanent teeth are crowded or out of line. Sometimes communicable diseases, such as scarlet fever and measles, may cause a heavy deposit of bone over the crown of the erupting third molar. As a result, the crown of the tooth is deflected and the tooth impacted."

"Quite often the jaws are not long enough to afford sufficient room for the third molars, in which case the third molars become impacted or locked beneath the second molars. Underdevelopment of the jaws produced by excessive mouth breathing sometimes causes impacted third molars."

"Are impacted third molars harmful?" asked Jack. "Not always," replied the dentist. "Impacted third molars may be present in the jaws for many years without causing the slightest disturbance. The majority of impacted lower third molars sooner or later will cause some trouble. Sometimes, this trouble will be confined to a simple swelling of the gum tissues in the region of the impaction. Very often the swelling may extend to the surrounding muscles and glands, in which case the pain is usually continuous and severe."

"Sometimes an impacted lower third molar may press against an important nerve trunk, resulting in severe pain in and about the head. Patients often complain of pain around the front of the head and around the temples. Other patients complain of pain across the back of the head, in the neck, and in the eyes and ears. Impactions of the lower third molars sometimes give rise to neuralgic pains about the side of the face and jaws. Impaction of the lower third molars may set up functional nervous and mental disorders without causing any local symptoms."

"By Jove," exclaimed Jack. "I'm certainly glad my wisdom teeth are coming in straight. If they were impacted, I suppose it would be the proper thing to have them removed?"

"Not necessarily," replied Dr. Young. "Many people go through life with one or more impacted teeth and suffer no ill effects. On the other hand, many people suffer from obscure head pains which are caused by the presence of impacted molars. We cannot lay down a hard and fast rule for the extraction of impacted teeth. Each case must be decided on its own merits."

CLIPPER SHIP MYSTERY

WASHINGTON, March 26 (UP)—The cause of the Samoan Clipper crash in the south Pacific will be labeled an unsolved mystery in the air commerce bureau's report of the accident, it was learned today.

One possibility understood to have been cited in the report, which will be made public within the next few days, was that an electric spark might have ignited gasoline which was being dumped from the clipper preparatory to landing at Pago Pago. However, no definite conclusions will be made.
