The new building which is being erected at the farm of Henry Schlueter is now nearing completion and adds to the general appearance of the other farm buildings.

P. H. Clarke has been cutting hedge and burning the brush, getting ready for the planting of corn the coming week or as soon as the weather and ground are warm enough. He has double-diced the ground and has it in good condition.

Will Plant Many Trees
Miss Myrtle Wood, who has a farm northeast of Wabash, has arranged to have several thousand small trees set out on the place. The work is to be done by the CCC boys and will require about a month to complete.

It is one of several projects of this nature being carried out in Nebraska to help replenish the timber supply, which has been ravaged by drought and unwanted destruction for fuel the past few years.

Changing Road Somewhat
The road running west out of Weeping Water towards Wabash is being graded and made ready for a coating of crushed rock. The work has proven quite difficult and required a lot of time to complete, due to required changes in the location of the roadbed, eliminating a particularly sharp turn near the home of Arthur Wiles, and when completed should be much safer than heretofore. Mr. Wiles has also been doing some grading on his own hook, improving his driveway to make it more convenient to get into and out of his yard since the change in the highway.

Recalls Early Days in Wabash
Conversing with Herman R. Schmidt of Murdock, father of our townsman, Louis Schmidt, we received considerable information on early days in Wabash, when the elder Mr. Schmidt built a store on the site where the present store stands, some time in the early eighties. It was used for a grocery store and after a few years was destroyed by fire and rebuilt. At that time there was a butcher shop just across the street south from where Louis Schmidt now resides. There were two other stores just west of the Wabash hotel and then across the street west there were two more business houses and south on another corner was another store. In fact Wabash was a very lively town at that time, with many business houses, and all doing a thrifty business.

Seeking to Make Bridge Safe
There is much concern just now regarding the possibility of extending the highway improvement on west from the point south of Wabash to which it is now being graded. It was recently reported the road would run north from that point to town, thence west a couple of miles and then jog back south again. This in line with a plan to eliminate the dangerous Gyger bridge that crosses the Weeping Water creek and the Missouri Pacific tracks southwest of Wabash. A delegation visited the county seat this last week in the interest of having something done to make this bridge safe. Some of the county commissioners have also visited the scene and looked over the structure. This is the bridge where a serious auto accident took place last fall, when a car driven by a group of Plattsmouth parties was precipitated to the bottom of a 14-foot ditch.

The Wabash rural mail carrier, who has to travel over this bridge every day or detour a distance of some three miles was among those from here who went over to consult with the commissioners. Some have advocated a WPA project to solve the problem, but so far no definite decision has been made.
