"Saul Becomes a New Man"

Acts 9:1-12, 17-19.
We have finished the study of the Apostle Peter, one of the Pillars of the new church. It was an interesting study for three months. Now we begin another three months study of the life and letters of Paul—the greatest man that ever lived, whose writings are quoted more than those of any other man, who did more to spread the gospel of Jesus Christ than any other man, who suffered more for the gospel's sake than any other man.

Before taking up his conversion, we should take up the study of his life before the great change in his being. He was born in Tarsus, an intellectually and politically famous city of Cilicia (Acts 21:39; 22:3). His father and ancestors were Pharisees and he became a devoted Pharisee himself (Acts 23:6). He was by birth a Roman citizen (Acts 22:28). Tradition tells us that after finishing school at Tarsus at the age of 15 years, he was sent to Jerusalem, where he lived with his sister, who had married a Roman officer, and continued his education in the school of Gamaliel (Acts 22:3).

He was a very serious and pious man, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, according to the law (Phil. 3:6; Gal. 1:14). We have no evidence that he ever saw Jesus in the flesh. He held the clothes of his colleagues when they stoned Stephen to death (Acts 8:1; 22:20). He never forgot what he saw in Stephen's face and heard from his lips, which must have had a tremendous influence on his life. From this day until his conversion he became the leader of the persecution of the early Christian church. It is here that the lesson begins.

Whatever Paul undertook to do, he done it well. He became a zealot, a fanatic. He seemed to have paused a moment to survey the field of carnage. News came to him that a band of believers in Jesus had assembled in Damascus (the oldest city in the world). That was enough for Saul. Empowered by the High Priest, he starts for the new field. He is determined to finish the work he set out to do. He fights for the faith of the fathers; "the way" these followers of Jesus go must be blocked—yes, destroyed, before it gets too far. So have many used their energy and ability in working in a bad cause. This characteristic of Paul's has dominated him all through his life.

Saul is within sight of his goal—Damascus. (A description of this renowned city would be very interesting, but space and time forbid it).

EIGHT MILE GROVE WILLING WORKERS

Eight Mile Grove Willing Workers met at the home of Mrs. John B. Kaffenberger March 23 for an all day meeting. Dinner was prepared by the ladies of the club, carrying out the "Company Dinners" and how to serve them. The table was decorated with Mrs. Cecil's birthday cake, baked by Mrs. John B. Kaffenberger in honor of the 74th birthday. The club presented her with a beautiful gift.

After dinner they had election of officers as follows: Mrs. Florence

We can well imagine with what elation Saul views the scene before him. Soon he will be on the return trip, with prisoners in chains and when once in Jerusalem with them, the Sanhedrin will do the rest, and he will be acclaimed a "defender of the faith."

But near the city gate ends his dream of greatness. The crisis of his life has come—he meets Jesus, who has been waiting for him. So have many "proposed" and God his "disposed." At high noon, under a bright Syrian sky, a light outshining the sun breaks upon the travelers. They fall to the ground and Saul hears a voice. He, who thought to arrest others, is himself arrested. "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" At once he recognizes his superior! "Who art thou, Lord?" "I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest."

Saul could not have any feeling of dislike and hatred against Jesus; he did not know him. So the Lord asks "Why?" What knowest thou about me to justify hatred and persecution? What is thy motive? Saul has no answer to give. So do men today talk against Christ, his church and his followers, blaspheme and curse, not really knowing why. The dazzling light—the glory of Christ—has blinded Saul; he is led into the city.

This is quite different from what he had expected. Now, he is a prisoner in the house of Judas in the street called "Straight." Three days without food or drink, blind, he has time to reflect on the past.

We leave Saul and view another scene. God does not send an angel to bring comfort, but uses a God-fearing man—Ananias. That is God's method to use men as co-workers. We never hear of these men again. That was not an easy thing to be sent to the enemy of the church; but God said, be not afraid of him. "Behold he prayed." A praying man is not dangerous.

Ananias enters the home of Judas, sees the penitent: "Brother Saul!" That was a comforting salute. Saul's eyes are opened and the Holy Ghost is given; baptism follows, a soul is born again. We should pause and listen to what God has to say to Ananias about Saul (Verses 15 and 16). "He is a chosen vessel . . . to bear my name to the Gentiles . . . I will show him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake."

That was not a pleasant message to deliver. But the servant of God comes and says: "Thus sayeth the Lord;" he will preach the whole counsel of God, it may not be a pleasant message, but it is wholesome.

Ruthford, president and social leader; Alice Iske and Anna Kaffenberger, leaders; Violet Schiessl, secretary-treasurer; Josephine Ulrich, news reporter.

The club voted to adjourn for the summer. Everyone enjoyed the club meeting.
