BROKEN TO HARNESS
Modern Nebraskans hear little about sale and delivery of large herds of horses, but such deals, say research workers of the Federal Writers' Project, WPA, were common in days when horses did a considerable part of the country's work.
Jim Dahlman, then mayor of Chadron, contracted in April 1896 to deliver several hundred horses, broken to harness, to the Lower Brule agency in South Dakota. Delivery was set for some time in June, so the horses were driven overland.
Most of the animals were unbroken and the breaking to harness proceeded on the way; for this purpose Dahlman obtained several sets of extra strong harness and had a Chadron wagon-maker build three special two-wheeled carts, much like Roman chariots. These chariots had no springs and it was suggested that fellows with false teeth had no business driving them. Every day a few of the horses were hitched to the carts and allowed to gallop over the prairie until ready to quit.
The riding was rough and spills were numerous, but the horses were delivered as per contract, "broken to harness."
