

Britain Calls First Group of Army Conscripts

34,000 Youths of Twenty Years, Born as the World War Ended, Called for Training.

LONDON, July 1 (UP)—Great Britain called its first batch of conscripts to the colors today under its new peace-time compulsory service act.

Thirty-four thousand youths of 20 years, born as the echoes of the World war died, were ordered to report for army training July 15—the first peace-time conscripts in modern British history. They are among 200,000 20-year-olds who have passed their physical examinations. They will receive six months training as militiamen. Others will be called later.

Calling of the militiamen came as one evidence of the racing pace of British rearmament, the result of the European situation.

Another was the assumption today by two of the country's foremost military leaders of new, "war time" army posts—Gen. Sir Walter Kirke as inspector general of the home forces and Gen. Sir Edmund Ironside as inspector general of the overseas forces.

It was made known officially today that on his way to assume his new post Gen. "Big Bill" Ironside, who had been serving as governor and commander-in-chief at Gibraltar, conferred with Gen. Francisco Franco, Spanish Nationalist leader, at Burgos.

Kirke had just returned home for a visit to the general staff of Finland. Tomorrow King George, in his first big public engagement since his welcome home reception, will review a parade of more than 25,000 men and women in a demonstration of war preparedness. Units of the territorial army, ambulance corps, air raid precautions, organizations and auxiliary bombing raid fire squads will take part.

Tomorrow night Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain will broadcast by radio an appeal to every citizen to join civil defense preparations.

Next week the government will begin distribution of 45,000,000 civil defense pamphlets, entitled "If War Should Come," instructing the population how to face air raids and other dangers.

On the political side, Polish officials in London said that they had every reason to believe that they would receive Britain's immediate and unstinted armed assistance if Poland considered her independence menaced not merely by a German invasion of Danzig but also by a coup inside Danzig.

Newspapers revived speculation that Winston Churchill and Anthony Eden, dissident conservative leaders, might be taken into the cabinet. The Star suggested that Churchill might be made first lord of the admiralty.

Political quarters doubted the likelihood of such a move on the ground that it would end any chance of negotiating with Germany as both Churchill and Eden are outspoken enemies of "appeasement." Further, Churchill's relations with Chamberlain and some others of the cabinet "appeasement" group are not cordial.

It was reported today that Britain and France had perfected arrangements to give Poland armed assistance in event it decided that military preparations in Danzig constituted a threat to Polish independence.

BOY, 5, EXPERT SHOT WITH .410 GAUGE GUN

CLEVELAND, O. (UP)—Albert Power, known also as "Pee-Wee" Power, is only 5 and is small for his age, but he astonishes his neighbors in suburban Avon Lake by his accuracy with a shotgun.

"Pee-Wee" is a little bit bashful before strangers, but when friends are around he will, with a little coaxing, take out a .410 gauge shotgun nearly as big as he is, and blast away with remarkable accuracy at tin cans strewn about a vacant lot.

The little boy does his best shooting while crouched within two automobile tires, piled upon the other, like a machine-gun turret.

Work Progressing Nicely
Work is progressing rapidly on the buildings on the Mennonite church camp meeting grounds. It is expected that they will be ready for the state meeting to be held in August. Special arrangements are being made for the young people who will attend the meetings.

Making Many Improvements
It is encouraging to note the improvements which are being made in the homes in our community. For the past few years there has been very little of such work done and it is in keeping with the general trend of optimism which has taken hold of our people, that old houses are being bought for permanent homes and that they are being remodeled and painted, making them a place of beauty, instead of a blot on the landscape, as they would soon become if left as they were.

One of the places which shows a very noticeable improvement, is the Henry Lemke property, formerly the Haith property, built originally the Matthews home. This house had been rented or idle for several years. Mr. Lemke had a discouraging task before him as the house stands on the side of a hill, almost inaccessible. He is terracing the yard, and has planted flowers and fruit trees. With new paint inside and out, they have a very fine home, which he and Mrs. Lemke are enjoying greatly.

Not far from this home is what has been known as the Lacy home, a large old home, well built, but not modern. Herman Hillman has purchased this property, and is remodeling and added a bath room and other modern improvements, and hopes soon to have the yard leveled and terraced.

He fired two shots, and the mother and daughter fell, fatally wounded.

The chaperone negro housekeeper said the assassin was the estranged husband and father, Joseph, who had not lived in their Bronx home for more than a year.

Tobacco Growing in Nebraska Once Staple Crop

Early Day Settlers Thought State Might Develop Possibilities But Never Realized.

Tobacco was grown in Nebraska for several decades before 1900, according to research workers of the Federal Writers' Project, WPA. An Omaha commission firm stimulated the growing of this crop by furnishing both seed and instruction free to farmers from whom it hoped to buy the product. The Pawnee Enterprise in 1879 thought this a fine idea which "would make the tobacco market of Nebraska as good as anywhere else" and thus retain at home "the vast amount of money paid out for this leaf."

Begun even before Nebraska became a state, the growing of tobacco thrived for a time and then declined. In 1860, some 3,636 pounds were produced; in 1870, the figure was 5,988. The greatest boom came in the next decade; the 1880 census shows 57,979 pounds were grown on 101 acres. In 1890 the figure fell to 11,049 on 46 acres, and by 1900 Nebraska had grown only 5,765 pounds on 14 acres.

At its height, the crop was responsible for the organization of a state association and drew the interest of Senator A. S. Paddock and the department of agriculture in Washington as well as experts from other states. An attempt by the government to grow the crop near Columbus proved a failure, and even the state's most enthusiastic tobacco farmer did not enjoy too much success. He farmed near Fremont and insisted that Nebraska's soil and climate were adapted to the growing of tobacco. He also had a cigar factory.

With this opinion, however, a Kentucky farmer who had grown tobacco for 25 years disagreed. He told the Nebraska Farmer in 1892, while visiting the state, that he was very pleased with what he had seen in Nebraska, but advised against trying to raise the crop. "Let it alone and stick to that for which your state is best adapted," he said. "There is no profit in growing tobacco, as it requires much labor, sadly impoverishes the soil and when grown is the source of much evil in many ways." He referred to the smoking and chewing habit, on which he based much of his opinion.

But tobacco farmers never earned as much money as they dreamed. In 1891, for example, a Lexington farmer grew 1,200 pounds on each of his four and a quarter acres. The price of 15 cents per pound brought him only $180 per acre. But he had to irrigate his fields and pay his costs from this sum. Though the quality of the tobacco was called fine, it was used only as filler.

She felt 90 volts course up her arm and nearly toppled from her chair.
