

A HIGH-PRICED LUXURY.

A dollar for a book like that! The price is startling, very. Why, I could buy for it at there sum a Webster's dictionary—

A half a dozen inches thick, an' words on all the pages, Readin' enuff to last a man for ages an' ferages.

Why, one' I bought a organ box, an' only paid a dollar.

An' that's exactly what I paid for Rover's new brass collar.

The sugar I could buy for that would sweet the winterasses!

'Twould buy a hundred pound o' hay, two gallon o' molasses!

My da'ter's been away to school, an' poetry is her hobby.

But if it comes es high es that, it's purty steep, by hobby!

I can't see no good reason for sich everlasting prices!

It seems to me it orto be as cheap as good advice is!

These poetry fellers never work; they go around a moonin'.

With heads a mile above the clouds, their high-flown harps a tunin'.

And singin' 'bout the blinkin' stars, the rowdip and the datsy.

The new moun hay, the soft-eyed cow—I really think they're crazy!

She'll hafta berry one, I guess, of somebody er ruther;

(I berry all my papers first o' one an' then another.)

The necessary things o' life is all that I kin pay fer;

Enough to eat, enough to wear, is all I ever pray fer.

I can't pay that for sich a book; the price is out o' reason!

I've had poor luck this summer, too; it's been a tryin' season.

Besides, sich stuff is mighty dry, an' tasteless as a cracker.

I buy of Smith a dollar's worth of Golden Seal tobacco?

—HARRI RICHY.
