STOVES. A Study in the Greatest Thing in House-keeping as Seen by the Journal Man in John R. Cox's Hardware Store.

Stoves, Stoves, Stoves, of all sizes and descriptions, indestructible, economical of fuel, perfect in regulation and distribution of heat, neat and artistic in design, beautiful in finish, and in an array sufficiently varied in size and design to meet the requirements of everyone from the most modest of housekeepers to the greater needs of restaurant and hotel keepers. That's what the Journal man found in making a tour of investigation through the hardware store of John R. Cox one day this week.

The Majestic Steel Ranges, the latest improved Detroit and Standard Lighting Co's Gasoline Stoves and Ranges, the famous lately perfected Standard Lighting Co's blue flame petroleum burner for those who live where it is not convenient to procure gasoline—all this elegant display of the skill of the modern range builders' art impresses one with the conviction that the prime essential to the assuring of a happy home lies in the careful selection of a first class cooking stove.

No less a one than Owen Meredith said: "We may live without poetry, music and art; We may live without conscience and live without heart; We may live without friends; we may live without books; But civilized man cannot live without cooks." And where's the cook who can live and ply her calling without one of John R. Cox's Majestic Steel Ranges, one of his Gasoline Stoves or Petroleum Blue Flame Burners? And if the cook or the cook's papa neglects to take the Journal man's advice, is it his fault and the cook's view of an up-to-date stove which, from front door to back entrance, is a delight to the eye of the thrifty housekeeper?

Call at John R. Cox's, see for yourself and be convinced. THE GREAT MAJESTIC
