per which prints it. People are too intelligent to be influenced by his style of gutter journalism. Really I am almost ashamed to have used so much valuable space in referring to this fellow, but what do you think of a party that hires such a man to be its mouth piece?

Next week the three great conventions will be held. Who will be the nominee? Will he be a populist, or a democrat, or a silver republican. If anybody asks you tell him you don't know. If you do, you won't endanger your reputation as a prophet? A great many persons have asked me what I thought about it, not that my opinion was worth anything, but they asked through force of habit. I told them I was not in the prognosticating business this year. This is my year off. I think it might have had a soothing effect if all the men around the state house had followed the same course. Maybe they have, though I don't know. I have a kind of lurking suspicion that the rank and file should make this nomination and that men in official positions should keep their hands off.

Seriously, though, every delegate should go into the state convention determined to be dictated to by only common sense and patriotism. He should throw aside prejudice and should desire only harmony and victory. He should be willing to bow to the wisdom of the majority and should have in view the good of all. If every delegate do this, there can be no trouble. Above all things there should be a union of forces. Any other course means suicide. This course means success.

Since my last for the INDEPENDENT many things have happened in the political world. The Nashville fiasco is over and gone. In Ohio, the middle of the road seems to lead to the flesh pots of Hanna. Cokey, who left the populist party last winter, has been driven back into it by Maj. Dick and made the candidate for governor. But perhaps we should not too severely condemn our erring brethren. The democrats began it by making fools of themselves. They did it in Ohio, Maryland and Virginia. Both the populists and democrats of Nebraska can well afford to avoid the mistakes of their brethren in the east and follow a wiser and juster course.

been honest enough admit his rascality to say, "The public to be damned, I run my roads to make money."

When we think of the two hundred millions acres of public land which have been given to these corporations; when we think of the shameless appetites with which they have carved bonuses from the federal treasury; when we think of the lavish "aids" which have been voted them in every state; when we think of the way cities and towns have opened their cash drawers to them and said "help yourselves," we can give no excuse for this use of the property of the public unless we say that the corporations were regarded as public institutions working for the public good.

That being the case, the manner in which public lands, public moneys and public franchises worth billions of dollars have been given to them free of charge can be justified.

In no other way can it be done.
Betty Gaskins (Democrat), Wife of Job Gaskins (Republican); or Uncle Tom's Cabin Up-to-Date, is the title of a new story by W. I. Hood. It is the life history of an old couple that have struggled from marriage to the grave to pay for a farm. The scene is laid in Ohio, and has some local hits, but they are such as are applicable to the conditions in any state. The jokes on the campaign of 1896 are pointed sharp and original. The chapter on Bloomers is an exceptionally good "take off" of the split in the democratic party on the money question.

The pathetic scenes are good; one would be hard hearted, indeed, if he were not moved to tears at the great suffering of these old people while they struggle to get an honest living, but are finally defeated and die, one a tramp, the other a pauper. And this, too, after they have actually earned, saved and paid out more money, in interest, than any quarter section of farm land was ever worth.

Following the story are some chapters by K. L. Armstrong on the Philosophy of Money, American Financial History, Financial Authorities, Interest and Currency, Debt and Slaves, and The Laws of Property.

It is a book well worth the price, and your time will be well spent reading and studying this most excellent work. The illustrations, by C. B. Falls, are good. It is published by the Schulte Publishing Company, 323-325 Dearborn street, Chicago.

The Right to be a Populist.

Editor INDEPENDENT:

As one individual populist in the state of Nebraska I desire to take decided issue with those persons and papers in our own ranks who have taken up the cry of "Hanna boodie," etc., in connection with the action of the Ohio populist state convention or other states where populists have shown a disposition to stand up for their own principles and organization.

A careful and thorough examination of all the testimony in the Ohio case fails to show a single populist delegate who was bought with Hanna's money. It simply shows that men who went to Hanna's agent for detective purposes got checks from him which they did not use, but employed in exposing him. So much for the testimony.

Here is the Ohio case: The democratic state convention met, nominated a complete ticket, adopted a platform favoring "coin redemption" of money and adjourned without asking a conference or noticing the existence of the populist party. When the latter were two courses open for to see. The first was to nominate a ticket and adopt a platform expressing its principles. The second was to disband the populist party in the state of Ohio. Is it any wonder that by a vote of 530 to 170 the convention resolved in favor of the former course? To me it seems the only reasonable and rational course they could adopt.

Let us have an end of these accusations of "Hanna boodie," etc. Let us concede the right of a man to be a populist and stand up for populist principles and the populist party in any state in the union from honest and patriotic motives.

A. E. SHELTON,
Lincoln, Neb., Aug. 25.

What kind of a man do you want for supreme judge? This is an important question, and every delegate to the state convention should consider it carefully. He should not be influenced in his decision by any arguments of location, political debts, etc. The qualification of the man and his loyalty to the interests of the people alone should be considered. The supreme court has been a clearing house for the republican party long enough.

Adjutant General Barry has issued an order to the commanders of the companies of the Nebraska National Guard to hold a two days' company encampment during the month of September. The Guard was never in better condition than at the present time. Next year the Guard will hold an encampment at the Trans-Mississippi exposition at Omaha for a week or ten days. It is on this account that the encampment will be shorter this year than usual. It will make an excellent showing at the exposition.

Slow Starvation—Stomach Disease.
Mrs. Louise Bell, Waterloo, Neb.: "It is many years since I have been so well as I am now. About twenty-five years ago my stomach began to weaken, until I could not retain sufficient food to nourish my body. I had a pretty good appetite right along, but could not eat because I knew the agony that would follow. Although living in a land of plenty, with everything at my command, hunger meant pain. I was forced to nearly starve myself. It is a fact that for many months I could not retain food. My stomach is a good one now and I am glad to see a liberal diet with perfect comfort. The Starvation and Stomach Disease that I went through."
