Plain Talk and Well Said

TWO OF COM PAUL'S SOLDIERS UNDER GUARD.

According to the war correspondent who photographed the two Boer prisoners shown in the above picture, they are "better men than they look." They are without uniforms and are dressed exactly as they were when they emulated Cincinnatus by leaving the plow to take up the sword. These two prisoners were captured at Colenso by General Buller's men. They are not very showy looking soldiers, but their bravery is unquestioned. The word "ruinek" means "red neck" in Dutch. When at rifle practice, the Boers often shoot at the red head and neck of a turkey, the body being buried in the ground. In previous campaigns the British wore their red uniforms; hence the Boers termed them "ruineks." In this campaign the British are displaying very little red. It is too good a target.
