Every little noise would startle me and set my nerves to trembling from head to foot. I got very little sleep at night and I could scarcely eat the lightest food without having awful pains in my stomach.

"Every little noise would startle me and set my nerves to trembling from head to foot. I got very little sleep at night and I could scarcely eat the lightest food without having awful pains in my stomach. I took no end of medicine, but nothing helped me, and when I began with Dr. Miles' Nervine I had no faith in it. It helped me right away, and when I had taken seven bottles I was cured."

Mrs. A. K. JOHNSON, Northfield, Vt.

Justice Harlan commented on the idea that congress could "legislate the constitution into contiguous territory."

"This is a distinction which I am unable to make and which I do not think ought to be made, when we are endeavoring to ascertain the meaning of a great instrument of government."

Another thing that the further complicates the matter is that the court holds, after having decided that congress can pass such regulations and make such government as it sees fit for the territories outside of the constitution, that nevertheless the constitution does follow the far so as to limit the power of congress in regard to life and property in the territories, that such limitations of the constitution were everywhere applicable in the territories and could never be transgressed.

What effect these decisions will have upon the policy of the government no lawyer around these parts can be induced to say. The consensus of opinion agrees with a Lincoln lady, who, after reading the opinions of the court, said: "If that is law, then law is ridiculous."

It appears to the Independent that the court has abdicated a power always conceded to it since the days of John Marshall—that of being the final interpreters of the constitution. It was for the supreme court to say what was constitutional and what was not. They, in effect, so far as the territories of the United States are concerned, have turned this power over to congress.

dictated in favor of congress. Forms of government in the territories will not be fixed. They will vary with the changing moods of congress.

Part of the reasoning in the majority opinion can be justly described by no other word than demagogism. The attempt to connect the District of Columbia and the territories as subject to the same kind of government is one instance. There is a section in the constitution itself which provides that in the ten miles square constituting the District of Columbia "congress shall exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever."

These decisions have made the question more a political question than ever before. The government of the newly acquired territories is not to be settled by the courts and the constitution, but must be fought out on the hustings. The court could have taken the whole matter out of politics, but it has thrust it into the political arena to be fought out there.

One of the planks in all the next platforms will be devoted to what kind of a government shall there be in the Philippines and Porto Rico. Congress has had a good deal of legislating to do in the past. It will have ten times as much in the future.

tax the community heavily for years to come. In many cases, in most cases, I fear, these efforts are successful; some of those who are called our best citizens are interested in the perpetration of this injustice; the rest of us sit still and permit the yoke to be bound on our necks.
