As far as its effects upon prices are concerned, it makes not a particle of difference whether there is free coinage of silver, or whether the government buys the silver and coins it into "standard dollars, United States money, not redeemable in any other kind of money." The volume of money in circulation is increased just the same.

In another way it does make a great deal of difference. The par of exchange with countries which have a silver basis, gives to them an advantage over the American farmer the equivalent of a tariff of a hundred per ent. That still remains and the populist logic would obliterate it. All the silver that is now mined, aside from what goes into the arts, is coined. It is said that McKinley is going to establish a mint in the Philippines to hasten the coinage. There is no silver bullion uncoined anywhere. The only effect that the present system of silver coinage has, is to lower the price of American farm products below what they should be, for the benefit of European nations who have to buy from us. The countries that come into competition with the American farmer are all free silver countires. Raise the price of silver bullion up to $1.29 per ounce and the American farmer would laugh more and grow fat faster than he does now. Sixteen to one would do

Mr. Rosewater will have to write another article and explain more fully what hard boiled eggs have to do with the volume of money and the general level of prices. That part of his "logic" seems somewhat obscure.
