CURRENT COMMENT

The philosophy of some railroad managers is beyond comprehension. Just now they are uttering loud complaints about the way the automobile is cutting in on their passenger revenues. Yet before us lies a magazine devoted wholly to automobiling, and in which appears the advertisements of railroads—Nebraska railroads. Before us, too, lies a paper that is devoting its every energy to the development of Nebraska—to settling its vacant lands, building up her industries, including immigration—and it hasn't a single inch of railroad advertising. Yet Nebraska railroads ought to be first among those to encourage the kind of work this newspaper is doing. As before mentioned, the philosophy—or the lack of it—on the part of some railroad managers, is beyond comprehension.

In the course of events Woodrow Wilson has said some pretty harsh things about trades unions—things he doubtless wishes now he never had said, both because he realizes their untruth and because of the effect they have upon his candidacy. But even at that what Wilson has said is not to be compared with the harsh things Roosevelt has said of union men, nor with the harsh tyrannical things Taft has performed with labor as the "goat." Wilson says that labor unions standardize output and put limitations upon individual opportunity—two things absolutely untrue. Roosevelt says that the drunken roistering cowboys are better companions and better fellows than the wage earners in the cities—a statement that is merely an example of the Rooseveltian predilection for choosing certain forms of companionship. What Taft has said is crystallized into judicial decisions that mark labor organizations as something to be shot full of judicial holes at the behest of union hating corporations. Viewed from the union labor standpoint the candidates do not especially appeal. Judgment must be rendered upon platforms adopted—coupled with the willingness to carry out the platform pledges.

Missouri is just now engaged in a campaign designed to establish the single tax and do away with the antediluvian system of taxing enterprise and thrift. The men who profit most by their ability to escape taxation under the present system are opposing the amendment, and are naturally seeking to befuddle the farmers by misstating facts and quoting misleading statistics. The Missouri farmer ought to understand, first that it is not proposed to tax land area; secondly, that the tax proposed will be levied upon land values—value for use and occupancy—and, thirdly, that it will decrease the farmer's taxes by taxing the speculative value out of land. And, of course, everybody knows that the taxing of speculative values out of land will result in making land more accessible, therefore more valuable as producing qualities. Idle land is not only a burden to the entire community, but it is especially a burden to the farmer who tills and improves. Men who get rich off of the increase in land values are expected to oppose the single tax. But men who exist by applying labor to land ought always to be its chief supporters.

Of course the "short ballot" proposition ought to be adopted. We elect too many officials, and we elect them entirely too often. What a "holler" there would be if some one proposed that the people elect all the cabinet officers. But would that be any worse than our present state plan of electing a governor, then compelling him to accept as his conferees seven men in whose selection he has no voice. The newspaper favors electing the governor for four years, subject to recall, then allowing him to select the other state officials, making him responsible for their conduct.

As an expert in the art of carrying water on both shoulders, Governor-elect Haines of Maine seems to be entitled to consideration. He made Taft think he was for him, thus holding the "regular republican" vote. He made Roosevelt believe he was for him, thus holding the "bull moose" vote. Both are now claiming him. Just how it will be decided we are, of course, unable to say, but it is pretty evident that Mr. Haines was for Mr. Haines with considerable vim and success.

Several state fair visitors complain that they were "held up" for 10 cents a bottle for "pop" in the grand stand. To date we haven't heard any complaints from those who willingly coughed up 15 cents a swallow for fiery bourbon.

The Minden Courier is opposed to Morehead on the ground that he is "an occasional drinker." Whom is it supporting—Aldrich? The Courier asserts that Morehead has always worked for the saloon interests. That is absolutely false. The Courier says it has proof that Morehead opposed in his own ward the effort to support Bryan in the 1910 campaign. What of it? Plenty of honest, God-fearing men did the same thing. Even the editor of this little newspaper, making no claim to superior virtue, opposed Bryan's propaganda in that year. And this editor never voted for a saloon license in his life, never signed a saloon petition, never advocated "license and regulation," and never denounced as "tools of the whisky interest" men who differed from him in opinions. He thought in 1910, and still thinks, that the fight to put county option into the state platform was worse than a political blunder—it was little short of a political crime. And he doesn't care who knows what he thinks about it.

We would commend George W. Norris for his manly stand. We do not agree with him, but we admire his backbone and his desire to let the voters know just what he stands for. Norris can suffer defeat because of his convictions much better than he can stand victory won by subterfuge.

We sometimes wonder who it is that concocts all the obscene campaign stories that go the rounds every four years.

Cheking. Chinese estimates give the death toll between 30,000 and 40,000 as the result of a typhoon, combined with torrential rains and high tides, which occurred August 29. Great floods followed and the upper Wen Chow river overflowed a vast area.
