A SUGGESTIVE NICKNAME.

The Jerseyman Who Was to Much for the Postal Clerk.

"Philadelphia's queer town," said the drummer at the Cadillac one evening to the usual crowd of listeners.

"Of course the grass doesn't grow deep on Chestnut street, as New Yorkers would have you believe, but all the same, it is a fearful quiet place, if you've been used to hustling."

"The clerk took out a pile of letters, ran over them and tossed one onto the window sill."

"'Is that right?' he asked. 'Course,' replied the man studying the address a moment. 'Is that all?'"

"'Course,' mimicked the clerk. 'You don't want the earth do you?'"

"'Yes, if I can get it,' said the other unexpectedly. 'Got any more questions to ask?'"

"'Well, yes, I have,' said the clerk slowly. 'Will you tell me if 'Philadelphia' is that lady's real name, or is it a nickname? I never heard of such a name for anybody.'"

"'It's her nickname.' 'And what in thunder did they give her such a name as that for?'"

"'Cause she's so doggoned quiet that folks don't know half the time whether she's dead or asleep.'"

"'As he got out to let me to the window he grinned till the back of his neck showed through, and the clerk's face was a study.'—Detroit Free Press.

The Faulkner County Wheel: As the farmer is the great fountain head of all national and individual wealth, why not legislate while in the interest of farmers, and stop so much everlasting legislation in the interest of rings, combines, pools and trusts and against his interest?

Is there any good reason why those who create the wealth should not be entitled to all the rights and immunities that other people receive?
