Both Norval and Post admit that the funds of the state were fraudulently used but do not think that they were used maliciously. They did not do it to rob the state at all, but just merely to replenish their exchequer.

The decision will not surprise anybody. Norval and Post were expected to do just what they did. It was not expected that they could do anything better than whitewash the republican officials.

WHAT THEY THINK OF IT.

Reform Press Comments on the Great Impeachment Decision. The opinions of Judge Post and Norval in the impeachment trials in the light of all the evidence is a travesty on justice, and it will be very difficult to make a large portion of the masses of people believe that it was not obtained by partisan influence.

Of course the chief justice is wrong and the virtuous Post and talented Norval are correct as to what constitutes an impeachable offense but it will be remembered that even the judicial purists last mentioned acknowledge that hiring notorious thieves to do the state's work and paying them four prices is as they put it: "slightly prejudicial to the interest of the state."
