It has been suggested that the designation "battle of July Third" be applied to the great naval engagement that marked the destruction of the Cape Verde fleet. As the fighting on land about Santiago was chiefly confined to the battle of El Caney and the storming of San Juan these two names will cover the army's part sufficiently, There is no reason, therefore, why the designation of Santiago should not be used in distinguishing the navai victory, or, if it is desired to be still more definite, "the naval battle of Santiago" would answer the purpose.
