How The President Takes Defeat.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—The president went about his public duties as if nothing had happened, and seemed the least disturbed of anyone found in the White house.

Attorney General Miller, Postmaster General Wainmaker and General Vesey visited the president during the forenoon and offered all consolation possible at the party's defeat.

To what do you attribute the unexpected landslide? The attorney general hesitated a moment and replied, quietly: "When a man has the smallpox he doesn't care much how he got it."

A compilation of the returns for congressmen from the last date at hand gives the democrats a majority over the republicans of seventy-seven, and over both republicans and third parties of sixty-nine, with eleven districts doubtful.

If the republicans obtain control of the senate it will be by very narrow margin, and may be broken by a combination of democrats and populists.

JUDGMENT AGAINST THE TARIFF.

Secretary of the State Foster attributed the republican defeat to the tariff issue. The party, he says, challenged the judgment of the country of the McKinley bill and the verdict must be accepted as the will of the people.

Judge Clarkson Returns to His Home in Omaha.

OMAHA, Nov. 14.—Ex Judge Joseph R. Clarkson, supposed to have been drowned in Honey Creek, Ia., July 29, arrived in Omaha yesterday dressed in the garb of a day laborer.

He walked up the street from the depot, but met no one whom he knew before reaching the postoffice.

He entered the office and presented himself before the amazed postmaster who is his uncle.

In person he appeared ruddy and healthy and asked Major Clarkson to notify Mrs. J. R. Clarkson, which was done.

As soon as Mrs. Clarkson had been prepared for the meeting the judge went to the house at No. 614 south twentieth street where there occurred a dramatic scene of domestic joy.

Judge Clarkson, it will be remembered disappeared from his home in Omaha last July, and was supposed to have been drowned in Honey Creek, Ia. He says:

"I don't know to what to ascribe my action. I think I must ascribe it in the first instance to trouble with one of my eyes last winter. From the time I had the trouble it seemed to me as if my brain was weakening."

"What happened to me at Honey Creek I do not know. The first recollection that I had of who I was and what I was was at Clinton, Ia. The day I am not certain of, but it was on Sunday. I knew that I had partially walked and partially ridden there. I knew who I was, but I had not the slightest disposition to return home."

He went to say that when he left Omaha he had bought a cheap suit of clothes at a clothing store and took them with him to Honey creek, where he put them on after leaving the suit he usually wore in the boat and walked away from the shore. He does not know when or how he got to Clinton, except that as he says, he rode part way and walked part way.

The name Judge Clarkson gave while he was wandering was Brad Doolittle. In explanation he says that he thought this was his name.

"I hired out at Clinton to C. Lamb & Sons in their lumber yard, and have worked there ever since, up to last Thursday. I had at that time received assurances from Latham Lamb of the firm, that he would get me a place in a lumber camp in Northern Wisconsin or Minnesota, and was undecided whether to go there or go down the river and work on the Mississippi. Outdoor work was my idea. I never sought work in a store. I wanted to work out of doors."

Thursday I took my time. When I was vacillating between the north and south as a labor ground the idea of going home first suggested itself. The idea kept getting stronger and stronger until it ended in my starting for home.

"I had known that I had a home and that my family were all here, but it did not seem my place here. That had been my idea. I had read the Chicago papers once or twice a week. I had seen nothing in any of them about myself. Until I saw Major Clarkson yesterday morning I knew nothing of the situation in Omaha or what had transpired here."
