One of Our Citizens Badly Bitten by a Small Black Spider.

Last Thursday morning John Marsteller while sweeping out the store just after breakfast he felt some kind of an insect crawling on his left arm beneath his shirt sleeve. He rubbed his arm slightly when he felt a mild sting which caused a burning sensation when he hit his arm hard enough to kill the insect which proved to be a small black spider. It was probably not more than half an hour when his hand and arm began to paralyze and severe, acute pains commenced to attack him in the stomach. It then began to dawn on John that he had been poisoned by the bite of the spider on his arm. He started for home at once only about two blocks away with great effort he was able to get there and was obliged to take to his bed. The neighbors as soon as they heard how serious a condition John was in they came and began to do all possible to save his life. Unfortunately Dr. Phinney had gone to Utica Neb., on a visit and the town was without any medical assistance except Dr. Johnson Osteopath who was called and assisted the many friends in doing all they could to relieve Mr. Marsteller from his terrible suffering. It seemed at 11 o'clock impossible to save his life. All kinds of antidotes were given him to counteract the effects of the poison and about 3:00 o'clock he began to improve. In the mean time however, a doctor had been telegraphed to at Crawford nearly thirty miles east of here and on account of no trains coming this way he was obliged to drive over by team arriving about 8:00 o'clock in the evening after all danger seemed to be past. We are glad to say at this writing that Mr. Marsteller is doing nicely and will be able to be at his place of business in a day or two.

WOMAN'S COLUMN.

Edited by Mrs. Geo. D. Canon. Short articles from the ladies of Sioux county are solicited.

Heavy Tax on all Bachelors.

(Continued from last week.) No man should be taxed until he has passed his thirty-fifth birthday, because until that age a man may be merely postponing marriage to make himself worthy of it but after thirty-five he is liable to settle down into chronic bachelorhood unless roused to the necessity of action.

No woman unless an invalid should receive the benefits of the bachelor's taxation before forty because many women remain single into their thirties from choice remembering that Cleopatra and Helen of Troy were both past that age when they inspired historic passion and many mothers of successful families have married for the first time in their late thirties. But it is always a tragedy when a woman passes into her fourth decade with no companion by her side.

Unless she has some great life work like Florence Nightingale or Emma Willard her outlook is desolate and sad.

However pleasant the bachelor's lot, from a purely commonplace standpoint, he misses the sentiment of life. A happy marriage offers more real pleasure in any one month than bachelors find in a lifetime.

For every pain or anxiety or worry in the life of a well-mated married couple there are ten mutual joys to recompense. But though the man misses much by remaining single the woman misses still more.

Clubs, travel, adventure are not the diversion to her which they are to him.

It is only right that he should be taxed for his selfishness and that she should receive the benefit of such taxation.

The Mothers Influence.

Most of our celebrated men have always been ready to admit that they owe their success chiefly to their mother; fathers for some reason or other being studiously ignored in such matters. Sir Walter Scott for instance states on more than one occasion that he owed his political gift to his mother, who in addition to being an accomplished woman, was a poetess of no mean merit.

The German poet Schiller possessed a mother who was always looked upon by her own circle of friends as an exceptionally clever woman, music and poetry were her pastimes in both which she excelled.

Ex-United States Senator Jones whom the people of Florida sent to the United States Senate three consecutive terms and we might add without being egotistic one of the brightest lights that has ever graced the halls of the senate chamber; this great man was wont to say (we have heard him) no true man ever great or noble in fact, no true man possesses anything good or great that he does not owe to his mother.
