WITH THE PTNNY MAN.

Somerville Journal: The way to get on in the world is to do your lying about early in the evening, instead of in the morning.

Washington Star: "You don't seem to be taking much interest in the party platform. I am afraid you don't recognize its true importance." "There you misjudge me," answered Senator Sorghum, seriously. "I recognize its importance thoroughly. Why, sir, the sentiments expressed in the platform are what get about all the votes that don't have to be paid for."

Chicago Tribune: "Henry, I wish you wouldn't lie down on those sofa cushions. Your clothes are dusty and they smell of tobacco." "Indeed, Genevieve?
What are these sofa cushions for, may I ask?" "You know very well. Fido sleeps on them."

Detroit Free Press: "I see that the German count's balloon can be steered in any direction the owner pleases—if the wind isn't too strong." "What does he call it?" "I don't know. What do you suggest?" "Limburger. It gets very high, you know, and always travels with the wind."

Washington Star: "Do you think the money question ought to figure in a platform?" "Of course," answered Senator Sorghum. "If anybody can make money get him votes by putting it in the platform instead of paying it out in cold figures, I don't see how you can reasonably blame him."

Detroit Journal: "Oh, how I long," she exclaimed, intensely, "for the strenuous life!" Her husband sighed. "To resist further were clearly vain. "Very well," he said, in a hollow, despairing voice. "Do you think seriously of going on the stage or of keeping two servants?" It mattered not to him; the expense would be about the same in either case.

Detroit Free Press: "It is proper to say that a person commits matrimony," asked the ignorant one. "Well," replied the sarcastic bachelor, "it would make it somewhat plainer to say that he was guilty of it."

Chicago Post: Husband—I would be fine if we could get some nice summer place near the city where I could see you every day. Wife—But it would cost so much. Husband—Not nearly so much as if you were out of my reach.

Washington Star: "You are not one of these men who find fault with the cooking at home?" "No," answered Mr.
Mekton. "I don't exactly find fault, but occasionally I do feel called to to apologize for the way things taste when Harriet gets home from the club. You see, I never could learn to make good coffee."

DE DIENICH'S EXPERIENCE.

Dr. Dienich was not prospering in his practice. Day after day he sat in the big easy chair in his office over the drug store and played checkers with hopkins, the photographer, whose studio was across the hall.
But for once that he was called, the photographer was called 20 times, and business was not particularly brisk with the photographer, Dr.
Dienich, who was greatly corpulent, asthmatic and bald, and whose bulbous nose, crimson-veined and polished, proclaimed nothing more than the truth about him, was wont to tell Hopkins that the public taste had become perverted. People, he said, preferred to call in a lot of empirical young chaps, fresh from some cheap-John school, with a lot of poppycock about bacteriological cultures and serums, and dude clothes and five-inch collars; they had no use for men of experience and judgment. A man that was any good at all might just as well quit the business.

Complaining thus, the physician would hoist himself out of his chair and shuffle over to his little dispensary, which divided an old-fashioned mahogany bookcase with the medical library; there he would pour some dark-brown stuff into a graduate glass and take the dose without wincing. Returning to his seat, he would bite off a large piece of plug tobacco and proceed to tell Hopkins of the palm days when he held a county job of surpassing softness and snappiness. Also of his lucrative connection with two or three life-insurance companies that had unfortunately failed, owing to the untimely demise of two or three of the insured. He was certainly a practitioner of experience, if not of experience, supposing all these stories he told Hopkins to be true.

Hopkins had a profound respect for Dr. Dienich, both as a checker player and as a gentleman of eminent scientific attainments. Once he had been afflicted with a boil on the back of his neck, and Doc Pflofeld had moneved with it for a week 'thout helping it a particle. Then he went to Doc Dienich, and Doc just natchally knocked that boil out in 24 hours.
Therefore Hopkins received Dr. Dien-ich's estimate of public discrimination with entire confidence.

"Why don't you try suthin' else, Doc?" he asked of his friend one morning. "If I had your education they couldn't keep me down. I'd fool
'em."

"The American people like to be humbugged, Andy," said Dr. Dienich, with slow and solemn emphasis.
"They like to be humbugged. If I was one of them smart little blather-skites like Pflofeld, with a pointed beard and patent-leather shoes, I'd be keeping the spindles of a rubber-tree buggy hot, I tell you; but I don't have to do it. I've got money, and I don't have to practice unless I want to. Say, Andy, you never heard of Pflofeld being called on to give expert testimony before the courts, did you?
I guess not. I wish I had all the money I've made that way in my pocket right now, all the same."

"I guess they pay good fees," said the photographer.

"I guess they do, if you're testifying for the right kind of people and you testify good and strong—and positively," replied Dr. Dienich, winking elaborately. "All the same, Andy, I ought to be making money now. I don't know but I'll do a little hum-bugging myself."

The doctor was still in this represensible state of mind when he looked over the grease-spotted morning paper in the perpetually soiled and sloppy restaurant where he took his meals, and saw this advertisement:

WANTED—Physician with $300; a snap for wide-awake man; none but regularly qualified need apply. H., room 426 Galen block.

"That looks as if it might suit me," mused Dr. Dienich. "A snap! Well, a snap is something I haven't any particular objection to. 'A wide-awake man!' I guess I've cut my eyeteeth. It won't cost anything to look into this, anyway."

When Dr. Dienich entered room 426 he thought he must have made a mistake. Five or six young women were seated before as many desks, clattering away on typewriters at a tremendous rate. Two others were apparently sorting letters in alphabetical order at a long table, while a boy read addresses from along slip to a sharp-featured man, who entered then in a snook and called them back to the boy in a high-pitched, monotonous tone of voice. It was a scene of more than ordinary business activity, and Dr. Dienich, looking thereon and concluding that nobody connected with the establishment was likely to have a snap, was about to back out, when the sharp-featured man broke off in the middle of an address, and with a winning smile asked what he could do for him.

"I called to see about an advertisement in this morning's paper," said Dr. Dienich, hesitatingly.

"Certainly," said the sharp-featured man, reassuringly. "That's all right; you want to see our Mr. Blevins. I'll see if he's engaged, if you'll kindly take a chair."

He went into an inner office, and coming out again, said that Mr. Blevins would see the doctor, whom he ushered into the presence with great politeness. Dr. Dienich found Mr.
Blevins to be a comparatively young man, with a knowing look and a brisk, businesslike manner. He was opening letters as Dr. Dienich came in, and the physician noticed that he was taking small silver coins from them, and that there were several neat little piles of dimes and quarters on the desk, as well as a thick stack of bills under a heavy paperweight.

Mr. Blevins laid down his paper knife, and, swinging around on his revolving chair, faced his visitor and plunged directly into business.

"You are a regularly qualified physician?" he asked.

"I am," replied Dr. Dienich.
"You can show me your diploma and satisfy me that you are all right?"
"I guess I can."
"Would you strain a point or two of professional etiquette if there was enough money in it?"
"If there was enough money in it I might."

"I believe you are about the man I want," said Mr. Blevins, smiling pleasantly. "You can put up $300?"
"I can, if you can satisfy me it's a good investment," said Dr. Dienich.
"Well," said Mr. Blevins, after a moment's pause, "here's the scheme. If you don't like it, let it alone, and I trust you treat our talk as confidential."

Dr. Dienich nodded assent.
"All right. This is a mail-order business. We advertise in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Buffalo papers right now. Here's the advertisements; look them over when you've got time, now. Here's the Phix-U Purifier, that's a dollar a bottle, three bottles for a dollar and a half; and the Phix-U Pills, six boxes for a dollar—sample boxes ten and twenty-five cents. Consultation free; blanks mailed on application. That's all right. We wouldn't expect you to diagnose or prescribe. We've got a good, handy young man to do that.
All you have to do is to sign the papers. Here's the situation—"

They were interrupted here by the entrance of a boy with a waste-paper basket full of letters, which he emptied on Mr. Blevins's desk, to that gentleman's evident annoyance.

"Don't you bring in letters that way again," he said to the youth, severely. "I told you about that the last time."

He opened one letter in a casual sort of way and took out a dollar bill, after which he passed the letter across to Dr. Dienich, who glanced over it and handed it back.

Mr. Blevins, as soon as the boy had gone out. "We can run this awhile without a doctor—we've done it, but we've busted up in business too often. I want to get down to a settled, respectable business, and I'm willing to give up a share of the profits to have it that way. Here's my proposition: We fit you up an office here in elegant shape and you come down and stay from ten till four to sign names and answer questions. If we want to use you that way. Then we work your name for all it's worth.
Your $300 will just about fix up your office, but I don't care anything about that except that I won't have a man that isn't interested in with me.
And, another thing: It's cash right down on the nail. I'm not going to advertise for a partner again, and I've turned down three already that wanted to take hold. They weren't just exactly the men I wanted. You may the money and I give you a copy of the agreement within an hour, if it's a go. If it ain't, there is no harm done. I propose to give you one-third of the entire profits. Our expenses are about 75 a week, including bottles, boxes, postage, help and office rent. I'll show what we've taken in."

Mr. Blevins had not exaggerated the dispatch with which he transacted the business. Within an hour Dr.
Dienich had paid him $300 and had become a member of the Phix-U Remedy Company of Chicago, with an iron-clad agreement by which he was to receive one-third of the profits. He was to call at the Galen building at noon the next day, bringing with him his medical diploma and other documents, including the certificate of appointment to the county offices before mentioned. He kept his appointment promptly.

He rattled at the door of 426, but it was locked and no sound of clicking typewriters came from within.
He rapped nervously up and down the corridors for at least 15 minutes and then he questioned the elevator man.
The elevator man had not seen Mr.
Blevins that morning. He said it was possible he might be out at lunch.
Dr. Dienich thought so, too, and went out and sought refreshments himself.
In half an hour he came back and found the office door still locked. He waited half an hour longer and then sought the agent of the building.
The agent informed him that Mr.
Blevins had engaged suite 426 two days before to open a typewriter-exchange business and had paid ten dollars as a deposit until he could get the lease made out. He seemed interested in Dr. Dienich's dilemma, and, taking down a pass key, descended to 426 and opened it. The room echoed hollowly to their footsteps and their voices. It was empty.
There was not a typewriter, not a desk, not so much as a scrap of paper left.

Subsequent investigation proved that the Phix-U company had never received any mail. Also that the newspaper clippings had never been clipped from newspapers. It was found that the company had advertised for competent stenographers and typewriters, and one of the girls was found. She said that she had been informed that there would be a competitive trial of speed and that she was set to transcribe loose sheets of "The House of the Seven Gables." At the close of the day she was told that she would be notified by mail if her average was satisfactory. One of the elevator men had seen the typewriters taken away and had helped to load the desks and tables into the freight elevator. Mr. Blevins being present, he had considered that it would be all right. Dr. Dienich and the police found out a lot of things like this, but they never found Mr.
Blevins.—Chicago Daily Record.

Prof. and Mrs. Kharas, 1615-17 Chicago Street, Omaha, Neb.

Dear Friends: I write this to be published, for I want to say to the public that I came to your place in Omaha last February suffering from what the best of doctors said was Bright's disease, and I also had a severe case of stomach trouble. In four days, after taking treatment twice a day, I went home perfectly well and had no indications of a return of my former trouble. I am going to take a course in Magnetic Healing and practice the grand science myself for the good of humanity. Thanking you for many favors, I am
Sincerely yours,

BELLY-ACHE
POOR LITTLE JOHNNY!
AND HIS "TUMMY!"
Small boys, and many times large ones, and occasionally girls, too, big and little, suffer terribly from convulsive pains or "cramps" in the bowels and stomach—pain so violent that it "doubles up" the ones attacked, and makes it impossible for them to stand up.
Some people call it colic, but most honest, plain-spoken people call it "belly-ache" and very properly, for the seat of the trouble is in the bowels, and caused by the violent efforts of the bowels to rid themselves of something which doesn't belong there. The small boy usually gets it from over-eating or from eating forbidden fruit, and suffers mostly in the summer time.
It's spring now, and "in times of peace, prepare for war." Let the boys and girls and the big folks, too, for that matter, clean out the clogged channels filled with winter bile and putrid undig-ested food, strengthen the 30-feet of bowel canal, live up the liver, and "summer bellyacher" will have no terrors, because they won't happen. The way to make the body ache-proof is to use CASCARETS, the perfect system cleansers and bowel strengtheners. For fear that anybody in the family should ever be attacked by belly-ache, keep a box of CASCARETS in the house always, and remember that all pains and troubles in your insides are
