When daylight came the sentinel was found in a drunken sleep, and the prisoner was missing. Joe's horse was also found to have vanished during pose it will continue. All the short, the man had escaped, but it was certain that he was safe from any pursuit by the miners. There was a loud outcry and general indignaton, and when the drunken sentinel was at last aroused there were a hundred men who demanded that he be hung in the other's place. Down under the "hanging tree" there was a barrel on end with a noosed rope dangling from a limb While men were crowding and shouting and demanding Washoe Joe unbuckled his guns, removed his hat and facket, and making his way through the jam mounted the barrel and slipped the noose over his head. The whole camp followed and surrounded him, and presently a great hush fell upon the crowd. Then he looked calmly about him and said:

"A week ago a little woman reached Sand Hill by the stage-the first woman ever seen in that town. She was little and she was purty, and her heart was breakin'. She had come a thousand miles-she had braved the Injuns and the hardships-she had dared mor'n a man-jest to hunt up that cruter you was calculatin' to hang this mornin' He is her brother."

There was something almost appalling in the silence around the speaker, and he was paler as he continued:

"No matter what he was, she didn't know it. She jest looked upon him as a bit wild and a wanderer. There was an old mother back in the states who was grievin' and weepin', and who wanted to see her boy again before death came. When that little woman told me the story-when she told me of her long journey and how she had sarched and sarched and been disappointed-when she appealed to me to aid her, I gin her my hand an my promise. "For months it has cost only five cents to have a white shirt rendered fit for further service in some of the laundry offices. During the same period other laundries have been charging 10 cents for shirts, and they have been explaining that the ten-cent was the

and then drew a deep breath and said: the same in the end. Many people the high-priced trade. The latter exall its work, they are dumped into the ame vat, containing a decoction which bleaches them and takes out all the lirt. The same is true of collars and smoothing apparatus, and the five-cent ty he left a bottle of whisky with the shirts emerge looking just as well as miner who had just come on duty to the ten-cent shirts. Also, the collars which were taken in to be washed and ironed for two cents appear as nicely finished as those for which perhaps four or five cents was collected.

"This is one of the tricks of the laundry business in this city that has been exceedingly successful in Denver. Under the new schedule of prices I supthe night. Nobody could say what hour collar and cuff ironing in the laundries is done by machinery, and bosoms and cuffs and collars cannot be varnished until they shine except by hand. The Chinese excel at this. They were given a hard blow when the American laundries inaugurated the scale of cheap prices. The new schedule is not raised enough to put much work back into the hands of the Celestinis."
