GOV. POYTNER'S ADMINISTRATION

MER GOVENOR'S RECORDS ING THE REPUBLICAN OFFICE SEEKER.

NEBRASKA NEVER

*

It Would Take Hunders of Column of Type To Recite the Thousands of Good Adminestrative Acts of the Fusion Officials which Saved the State Millions of Dollars, Lifted the State out of Disgrace and Has Crowned It With Honor To all Citizens Alike.

FARED BETTER

Lincoln, Neb., Oct. 22.-In the adminis tration of Governor William A. Poynter the public affairs of the state of Nebrasks have been well conserved. He do than raise the money necessary to has well and closely guarded all of the state's interests. He has been conservative in all his official acts, and at all times alert to promote and advance the welfare of all the people of the commonwealth. In the early and most trying days of his administration he face of what the governor did for the was confronted with many grave probtems, all of which he successfully treated, with honor to the state, and credit, to himself.

THE SUGAR BOUNTY. Upon the theory of encouraging the beet sugar industry in this state the republican legislature of 1895 passed an was passed over the veto of Silas A. Holcomb, the governor of the state at that time. For some reason best known to themselves, this same republican tegislature failed to make any provision In the way of an appropriation to meet the claims that would naturally arise as a result of the passage of such an act address to the legislature of 1899, also of the state. By an investigation of the republican, treating upon this subject, assessment rolls he became aware that said: "I am, individually, and the party the valuation of all other property exof which I am a member, is opposed absolutely to the protective policy of whole, had been constantly reduced by taxing one industry for the upbuilding the assessors year by year for the past of another; but my party is not now. three years at least, whereas railroad nor has it ever been at any time, either in theory or practice, in favor of repudiation in the smallest degree. The period. The result of this has been that legislature having made a bad bargain in 1893 the railroads paid 14 7-19 per for the state, should not be relieved of cent of the state taxes, in 1894 15 2-10 that bargain by a subterfuge or upon per cent, in 1895 14 8-10 per cent, in technicalities. The sugar bounty act 1896 15 2-10 per cent, in 1897 15% per of 1895 has created a number of just cent, in 1898 15 6-10 per cent, and in claims against the state, which are now 1899 15 4-10 per cent, so that although in the hands of the farmers who grew the valuation of the railroads has not the sugar beets. I recommend that been raised materially during the past

A FEW LEAVES FROM THE FOR- their vauits overflowing with money." These bankers were asked to advance WHICH HAVE BEEN WORRY- the necessary funds and take the pledge of the credit of the state and receive state. reimbursement from the next legisla> ture. The bankers did not respond to his appeal. The governor then appealed to the railroads of the state to bring the members of the regiment to their humes, and carry the account until the next session of the legislature should repay them. As is well known by all, the railroads absolutely refused to carry a single soldier home under these conditions. The governor then made appeal directly to the people of the state on similar conditions, and most noble was the response. More than enough money (over $40,000) was sent to the governor in hundreds of loving contributions, and in less than twenty-four hours, and the members of the First regiment returned to their homes without having to pay railroad fare from their scanty savings or appeal to friends for assistance. And yet still more did the governor bring the boys home. He hurried across mountain and plain thousands of miles to be present to receive and extend to the boys of the gallant First the welcome of the state of Nebraska on their arrival at the Golden Gate. In the volunteer soldiers, the opposition's charge that he vetoed a resolution of thanks extended to them, is a gratuitous insult to every member of the First Nebraska regiment. Actions speak louder than words, and the good actually accomplished by the governor for the returning soldiers was of more act authorizing the payment of a lasting benefit to them than the enbounty of $1.00 per ton, to be paid to dorsement of unamerican principles love.

> THE ASSESSMENT OF RAILROADS. As a member of the state board of equalisation in the matter of levying the annual assessment of the railroads. the governor acted on what he believed would be for the administration of equity and justice between the rail-Governor Poynter, in his inaugural roads and the balance of the taxpayers cept railroad property, taken as property has been held at practically the same assessed valuation during that asked the last legislature to make the necessary appropriation in order that the contemplations of the law might be carried out, but his appeal in the interest of one of the state's greatest industries fell by the wayside at the hanis of a legislature elected on a platform to "redeem" the state and give it a "business administration." Handlespped as the governor has been for want of funds he has done everything in his powers to protect this as well as every other material interest of the

which it is entitled, Governor Poynter

BEATRICE AFFAIR.

The governor's selection of a super intendent for the Institute for Feeble Minded Youth, at Beatrice, proved unfortunate, but as soon as he was in possession of the facts showing existing conditions he ordered his removal and appointed a tried and experienced man in his place. That the change was delayed was caused by an order of the district court, which, upon hearing the case, dismissed the action, after which an appeal to the supreme court was taken by the defendant. Upon a subsequent action being brought before the same court, the obstreperous superintendent was ousted, since which time the institution is in the hands of an able and efficient superintendent, and all interests are being properly cared

While some of the governor's warmest friends urged him to take forcible possession of the Beatrice Institution, he sedulously avoided that method of procedure because of his shiding and unfaltering faith in the honesty, integrity and sufficiency of the courts. Relying upon this faith he felt reassured that the state's best interest and his own constitutional prerogative would be preserved. By his action, showing as it does a deep respect for that great department of civil government, the judiciary, through which we receive the interpretation of the law. the governor has set an example that all good citizens may well strive to emulate. His action shows to every person in this great commonwealth the growers of sugar beets. This act cunningly concealed under a mantel of that the magnificent motto of the state, 'Equality Before the Law." was not adopted in vain or as an empty and meaningless combination of words, but that it voices one of the first and greatest principles of a republican form of government, a principle that guarantees to the humblest and highest citizen alike, full protective in their respective rights. The state institutions under the governor's charge and for the management of which he is primarily responsible to the people of the state of Nebraska, have been wisely and economically conducted. The sanitary condition of every institution is so well looked after that it is no uncommon subject of remark by those who have occasion to visit the same, and a source of much pride and satisfaction to the management and the state. The health, of the inmates is most satisfactory and the death rate smaller than in many years, all of which bespeak the constant and careful treatment accorded the state's unfortunates. The farm lands connected with the institutions are made to produce to their fullest rith a look of fear fixed on Jason's face Rachel Jorgenson was the enty date ar of the governor of lepined. She she passed out at the door.

Jason was now alone with Stepher Orry, and felt like a man who had stumbled into a hidden grave. He had set out over the seas to search for hi father, and here, at his first setting foot on the land, his father lay at his feet. this was Stephen Orry; this was he for whom his mother had given up all; this was he for whom she had taken a father's curse; this was he for whom she had endured poverty and shame; this was he who had neglected her. struck her, forgotten her with another woman; this was he who had killed her -the poor, loving, loyal, passionate heart-not in a day, or an hour, or a moment, but in twenty long brother, who adopted him, and he be-came the playmats of the governor's only daughter. Greebs. Time passed and the governor and his wife became estranged, their five sons staying with their mother on account of their jealousy of Sunlocks, who had become a faverite with the gov-ernor. Finally Stephen Orry confesses his misdeeds to Sunlocks, who promised to go to Iceland to find Rachel if possi-ble and care for her, and if she was dead to find her son and treat him as a brother. He bid good-bys to his sweet-heart, Greebs, and started on his journey. Meantime Jason had started on his saved the life of his father unknowingly. Orry died, and on his death bed was recog-nised by Jason. son stood over the bed and looked down. Surely the Lord God had heard his great vow and delivered the man into his hands. He would have hunted the world over to find him, but here at a stride he had him. It was heaven's own justice, and if he held back now the curse of his dead mother would follow him from the grave.

Yet a trembling shook his whole break. Why did he wait? He remembered the tenderness that had crept upon him not many minutes ago, as he listened to the poor baby babble of the man's delirium, and at that the gall in his throat seemed to choke him. He hated himself for yielding to it, for now

he knew for whom it had been meant.

It had been meant for his own father

doating over the memory of another that son's mother had supplanted his ance, had all but wept for both of God's own right hand of justice on this

Dawn was breaking, and its woolly light crept lasily in at the little window, past the lamp that sill burned on the window board. The wind had fallen, and the sea lay gloomy and dark, as if with its own heavy memories of last night's work. The gray light fell on the sick man's face, and up the poor, miserable, naked soul with.

in. The delirium had now set in strong and many were the wild words and frequent was the cry that rang through

"Not while he is like that," though

He took up a pillow in both hands and stood by the bed and waited, never lifting his eyes off the face. But the lull did not come. Would it not come at all. What if the delirium were never to pas saway? Could he still do the thing he intended? No, no, no! But Jason. "I will wait for the lull." " evil-doer.

the little house.

CHAPTER X. THE END OF ORRY.

But hardly had the words been spoken when he threw back his head and asked in a firm voice how far it was to Port Erin.

er of the governor of le and if not at roture

love with and " ried an idler, S

the orry and the second second a hearies wearen, wit toto rason ather's acts. Jason swore to b and if not him, then his son. In t time Orry had deserted his ship a t refuge in the Isle of Man, a sheltered by the governor of t Adam Pairbrother. Orry we to worse, and maried a their child, cailed Michael ocks, war born. The woman died a Drry gave their child to Adam P wrother, who adopted him, and he

"About thirty miles," said Greeba. looking up at the sudden question. "Not more?" asked Jason. "No. He has lived there," she answered, with a motion of her head to wards the bed. "He?"

"Yes, ever since his wife died. Be fore that they lived in this place with Michael Sunlocks. His wife met with a terrible death."

"How ?" "She was murdered by some enemy of her husband. The man escaped, but left his name behind him. It was Patricksen.

"Patricksen?"

Yes. That must be fourteen years ago, and since then he has lived alone at Port Erin. Do you wish to go there?" "Ay-that is, so I intended."

"Why?" "To look for someone." "Who is it?"

"My father." For a moment Greeba was silent, and then she said with her eyes down: "Why look for him if he wronged your mother?"

"That's why I meant to do so." She looked into his face and stam mered, "But why?"

He did not appear to hear her; his eves were fixed on the man on the bed and hardly had she asked the question before she covered her ears with her

Then Jason could bear up no ie flung himself down on his k by the bedaide, and buried his face in the dying man's breast. "Father," he sobbed, "I am

But Stephen Orry only smiled, and answered very quietly, "Ah, yes, I remember-that was part of our bargain, my good lad. Well, God bless you, my son. God bless and speed you. And that was the end of Orry.

(To be continued.)

PRAYER IN A PRINT SHOP.

It was 4 o'clock in the morning of the oreman's last night. The lights in the news composing room of the Journal fice burned dim, the last form had rumbled to the elevator, the clanking, singing linotypes were still. The foreman was leaving after eight years of work in the office to enter the Methodist ministry. The night chapel had prepared days before for this parting. A handsomely bound copy of "Nave's Topical Bible, a Digest of the Holy Scriptures," lay hidden all night under the coat of Scougal, the president of the Slouz City Typographical union No. 180, who was to be spokesman. On its front, Russia leather cover, were these words:

JOURNAL NIGHT CHAPEL CHARLES E. CARROLL.

Days have changed in all print shops Printers are not the rolstering lot that frame, and his heart beat as if it would they were ten years ago. But in all the years of which the dingy coposing room might tell many tales there never was scene so strange as when the chapel meeting was called to order by Worst, slug No. 4, chairman of the chapel, who admonished Carroll that this chanel meeting had been called "on him." There had been other chapel meetings "on" Carroll, at times when the night chapel did not feel quite so kindly toson. That son had supplanted himself; ward him. On those nights he had found a seat on the stone, facing the own mother; and yet he, in his ignor- circle of men as he did now. The chapel meeting was a surprise to him, and them. But no matter, he was now to be he was not sure of its import. He was not reassured by Billy Worsts words when he called the meeting to order. There was a shade of trouble in his face when Scougal was introduced to prefer a complaint against him."

"Mr. Carroll, frend and co-worker." the man with a grievance began, and at the kindly tone and the word friend, Carroll's face flushed and there was a tightening and quivering of his ligs. under Jason's eyes it seemed to light Carroll is only 22; deep loyalty to his employers and unfailing ambition to become, some day, a minister of the goapel, had sprung from a nature emotional and sympathetic. As the words of the speaker went on, telling of sincere interest in his future and admiration of his exemplary past what wonder in the silence of the room the strange and yet familiar surroundings all reminding him of his nightly anxiety to do his work well during the many years he had been there, that Carroll's eyes soon filled with scalding tears, that he was glad that the lights heaven had heard his vow and led him went out entirely for a moment, leavthere. The delirium would yet pass; ing them all in darkness and silence

save for the occasional seams

for the payment of all claims arising from the act of 1895 nested by certificates of weights from do so since that time. the proper authorities."

claims was not made is well known, reveals trhat in 1898, 31,139,348 acres of and brands the republican party as a land were assessed at $78,515,.828, while party of repudiation and as falsely in 1899, 31,358,021 acres were assessed pretending to promote and foster one at $77,890,017. An increase of 218,673 of the state's industries. VETO OF SUBTERFUGE RESOLU.

TION.

The legislature of 1899, in its pretended love for the volunteer soldier that being an active farmer, the govthen in the Philippine islands, in an ernor has no pecuniary interest whatadroitly constructed resolution, at- ever in any railroads or other cortempted to secure the governor's offi- porations, yet as governor of the state cial approval of the policy of the present republican national administration justly with all of the people and the in its war in the Philippines. The gov. various interests of the state. ernor in his message to the legislature strongly approved of the vote of thanks in the following words:

"No one has a higher regard for the bravery and gallantry of our brave soldiers in the far-away Philippines than I. No encomiums that can be spoken for them would exceed the bounds of propriety. The state of Nebraska is and has a just right to be proud of the First Nebraska volunteers We acknowledge with gratitude and joy the debt the state owes them by reason of the honor conferred upon it by their valor. We pledge the honor of the state that to the living shall be accorded worthy distinction, and to ty-two applications for executive elemthe dead all that can be given the dead-a fitting memorial to their fame." granted twenty-five pardons, commut-But regarding the conflict then carried on he said:

"I cannot stultify myself and the calm judgment of the thinking people of this commonwealth by giving official approval to the statement that the war of conquest now carried on in the far-away Philippines is in defense of Poynter's pardon record requires no the principles of our government, and apology; is adding new glory to our flag."

The governor, after much effort, finally succeeded in obtaining from the republican legislature the small appropriation of $2,000 to be used for the comfort of the sick and wounded Nebraska volunteers then in the field. When it is remembered that the state had about 4.000 volunteers it is readily seen how munificent (?) the gift. He did more. When the general government had ordered the First Nebraska regiment mustered out of the service at San the necessity for the services of a Francisco the volunteer was practically left stranded. The governor immedistely set about to secure transporta-uation of other property has been such which may be presented by the actual that the railroads bear a great portion growers of sugar beets in the state, of the taxation of the state today than whenever such claims are properly at. they did in 1893, and have continued to

In speaking of the reduction of the That provision for payment of these valuation of other property, the record acres and a decrease in the assessed valuation of $628.821. The same comparison also exists in the matter of personal property. Everyone realizes of Nebraska he felt it his duty to dea

PARDONS.

The opposition press has at divers times heralded to its readers the assertion that the governor has been free handed in extending executive clemency to convicts sentenced to the penitentiary, and that he has issued a large number of pardons without warrant of ment to all, is Governor Poynter's motlaw. The facts are that in the first twenty months of his administration farmer governor of Nebraska is apprenot a single pardon has been granted. During this time he has only commuted. the sentences of nineteen convicts and remitted three fines and jall sentences out of a total of one hundred and forency. Governor Crounse in two years ed or shortened the sentences of twenty-six others and remitted eight fines and jail sentences. Governor Holcomb in his two years issued ninety commutations, four pardons, and remitted eleven fines and jail sentences. Compared with his predecessors, Governor

DISEASES AMONG DOMESTIC ANI-MALS.

For years there has been on the statute book of the state a law providing for a state veterinarian, and three live stock agents, whose duty it is to investigate all cases of contagious and infectious diseases among domestic anirunis of the state. Successive legisistures have failed to make provision to meet the expenses of this board. Year by year as our stock industry develops competent veterinarian have become more pressing. The demands upon the governors for a veterinarian's services tion home for the regiment. The state of inte years have become urgent, and having no appropriation available for in order that the stock interests of the che purpose, he appealed to the bank- state might receive the protection to apacity and contribute much the support of the inmates, and show swer.

a remarkable contrast as compared with former republican rule. While the state's wards have been well and better fed and clothed than under republican rule, yet a consultation of the comparative table appearing elsewhere brings to light the remarkable fact that under fusion management four hundred more inmates were kept for $14,713.94 less of the people's money than under republican rule for an equal length of time. A careful study of the comparative table will convince the most bitter partisan which party has given the state "a business administration" and which party has upheld the "credit of the state."

One of the strong attributes for which our present governor is noted, and which is highly appreciated by people of all political affiliations is his demoratic simplicity. No one so poor but te receives the same warm welcome, same courteous treatment, same attention to his businers as accorded to men of position and prominence. Close attention to all matters belonging to his department, equal and courteous treatto. The administration of the present clated, and the people intend to honor themselves by retaining him for two years more.

Here's Some Back Talk.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 22 -- An attempt repeat the tactics of 1896, when men were intimidated into voting for Mc-Kinley and Hobari, has been promptly called in Des Moines. Some days ago J. G. Olmstead, managing partner of the firm of Bentiey & Olmstead, wholesale boot and shoe dealers, practically requested his traveling men and other employes to vote for McKinley. The statement was aft rward circulated that he had threatened any employe who voted for Bryan with discharge.

Mr. Olmstead denied the report, and says: "What I did say was that, in the event of Bryan's election, I would feel obliged to close our business rather than pass through an ordeal of commer. cial depression such as followed the second election of Mr. Cleveland."

J. K. Laycock, a capitalist and exp-rienced boot and shoe man, has, in reply to Mr. Olmstead, made the following announcement:

"I have organized a company to engame in the wholesale boot and shoe business in the event of Bryan's elec. tion. Mr. Olmstead states that his men will be obliged to look for jobs if Bryan is elected. I will employ es and all of them at an advance of 50 ; cont over the wages they now rea

"Was that why you came?" asked. "Yes." he answered. "If we had not been wrecked tonight I should have dropped overboard and deserted." "Strange," she said, "It was just what nineteen years ago."

"Yes, nineteen years ago," Jason repeated. He spoke like a man in a sleep, and she began to tremble.

"What is the matter?" she said Within a few minutes his face had suddenly 'changed, and it was now awful to look upon. Not for an instant did he turn his eyes from the bed. The delirium of the sick man had deepened by this time; the little, foolish, baby play-words in the poor broken English came from him no more, but he seemed to ask eager questions. in a tongue that Greeba did not understand.

"This man is an Icelander." said Jason.

"Didn't you know that before?" said Greeba. "What is his name?" said Jason. "Haven't you heard it yet?" "What is his name?" Then for one quick instant he turned his face towards her face, and she seem ed to read his thought. "Oh God!" she cried, and she staggered back.

Just then there was a sound of foot steps on the shingle outside, and at the next moment Stean and Thurstan Fairbrother and old Davy Kerruish pushed open the door. They had come to fetch Greeba.

"The Methodee man tould us." said Davy, standing by Jason's side, "and, my gough, but it's mortal cur'ous What's it saying. 'Talk of the divil. and sure enough it was of the big widd man hisself we were talking of, less nor half a hour afore we struck."

"Come my lass," said Thurstan. "No, no, I'll stay here," said Greeba "But your mother is fidgeting, and this is no place for a slip of a girlcome!" "I'll stay with him alone," said Ja-

"No, no," cried Greeba.

"It's the lad's right, for all," said old

Davy. "He fetched the poor chap out of the water. Come, let's take the road for it.' "Will no one stay instead of me?"

said Greeba. "Where's the use?" said Davy, "He's raelly past help. He's outward bound. poor chap. Poor Orry! Poor ould Ste- it was the face of him that fetched me phen!"

Then they drew Greebs away, and son indeed."

then he would accuse his father face o face and eye to eye, and then-mouse and for the growl of the press The current of Jason's thoughts was down below. Then the lights flashed suddenly arrested by a cry from the out again, the speaker finished the sick man. It was "Rachel! Rachel lines he was repeating and ended, and Rachel!" spoken in a voice of deep en-Carroll found himself on his feet, numb treaty, and there came after it in diswith the sobs he had suppressed. The jointed words of the iceiandic tongue a kindliness of the men and the fact of he did, when he came to the Island pitiful appeal for forgiveness. At that his going and of the nearness of the a great fear seized upon Jason, and the realization of the dreamed ambition of pillow dropped from his hands to the his young manhood, the going away to ground. "Rachel! Rachel!" It was the study for the ministry, that this was a old cry of years that were gone, but farewell-all these bore heavily on working with how great a differencehis self-control, and he will not forget then, to stir up evil passions-now, to that moment to the day of his death. break down the spirit of revenge. He spoke truly when he said, huskliy. "Rachel! Rachel!" came again in the that kindness was often hardest to same pitiful voice of supplication; and bear; that he felt that there never had at the sound of that name so spoken. been a young man so weighted with the bitterness of Jason's heart went obligations to friends as he. As he off like a wall of the wind. It was a went on his voice choked more and cry of remorse, a cry for pardon, a cry more, and the men sat with heads for mercy. There could be no jugglery. bowed, his voice telling them that they In that hour of the mind's awful vanwere in the presence of something saquishment a human soul stood naked cred. They sat on the tables, the forebehind him as before its Maker. anms desk and in the windows. Car-

Jason's great love was shaken. Had it been only a blind tangle of passion and pain? If the Almighty had called him to be the instrument of His vengeance, would He have delivered his enemy into his hands like this-dying delirious, with broken brain and broken heart?

Still his mother's name came from his father's lips, and then his mind went back to the words that had so lately passed between them. "Let me be your father, though I am a dying man!" Ah! sweet, beautiful, blind fallacy-could he not let it be? The end was very near; the delirium passed away, and Stephen Orry opened his eyes. The great creature was as quiet as a child now, and as soft and gentle as a child's was his deep hoarse voice. He knew that he had been wandering in his mind, and when he looked into Jason's face a pale smile crossed his own.

"I thought I had found her." he said very simply, "my peer young wife that once was; it was she that I lost s long ago, and did such wrong by." Jason's throat was choking him, but he stammered out, "Lie still, sir, lie still and rest."

But Stephen Orry talked on in the same simple way: "Ah, how silly I am! I forgot you didn't know."

"Lie still and rest." said Jason again. "There was someone with her. too. 1 thought I was her son-her child and mine, that was to come when I left Serve with cream is desired, but it is her. And, only think, I looked again very good without it. and it seemed to be you. Yes, you-for

When a man casts his bread the waters he finds that everybody out of the sea. I thought you were my the swim is out for the do

A DELICATE DESSERT. Beat the yolks of two eggs until light, ad a pinch of salt and two ta blespoons of sugar, and when well mixed add one pint of new milk. Set the bowl over hot water and stir the asted. Flavor with one teaspoon of antila and turn it into a dish suitable his student life will be so treasured as will the bible from the night chapel stewards of the Whitfield M. E. church, and it was surely appropriate that he should first lead in worship among men with whom he had worked nightly as a printer. He will enter Northwestern stronger in earnest praying. Already he was in his new calling. Two weeks ago he was given the permission to exhort by the full vote of the leaders and university Tuesday, leaving Sloux City Monday evening at 5:30 over the Northwestern, and nothing he will take to coll stopped a moment and then he asked them to let his pray. All arose reverentially and the voice of the foreman, who was foreman no longer, grew and the memory of its giving.

ustard until it is as hot as can be for the table. When it becomes firm place it in the ice chest. Meanwhile beat the whites of the eggs until stiff and dry; add two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar and one teaspoon of lemon juice. Beat until stiff. Pile it lightly on the surface of the custard and garnish with candied cherries.