A Warm Essay

In a little country school not far from Princeton literary exercises are indulged in every Friday afternoon during the term. A twelve-year-old boy read an original essay on "The Newspaper." This latter-day youthful Solomon treats his subject thus:

"Newspapers are sheets of paper on which stuff to read is printed. The men is in it, and the women the it to put on on shelves and sich. I don't know how newspapers came into the world. I don't think God does. The B.ble says nothing about editors, and I never heard of one in a letter from your neighborhood to being in heaven. I guess the editors is the PRESS-JOURNAL. Every thing you the missing link the fellows talk about need for the work will be furnished in. The first editor I ever heard of was the baen here ever since.

"Some editors belong to church and some try to raise whiskers. Ali of them raise hell in their neighborhood, and al of them are thers; at least all that I know At least I never saw a dead one. Some time the paper dies and then people fee glad, but some one starts it up again Elitors never went to school, because J.O. Wilson, " " 16 editors never got licked. Our paper is Solomon Story.
