Miss Lizzie and Katie Parsons, accompanied by George Williams, Conrad Parsons, and Howard Burke made a flying trip to Bodare, last Sunday and enjoying a fine sermon delivered by Emory Zimmerman who is filling the pulpit at Bodare this summer in the absence of Rev. Rice. After the sermon they went to the hospital home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Zimmerman where everybody finds a welcome, and filled up on the good things that Mrs. Zimmerman and Miss Lizzie know so well how to prepare and after enjoying the sociality of the young people of that vicinity they turned their faces toward Harrison and arrived in time for League and church services.

I find myself this patriotic day here at my old home in Iowa. The day has been a fine one for family reunions, picnics, fishing, and various amusements.

I find that nineteen years has brought about many changes in various ways.

The city of Muscatine has gained five thousand inhabitants and is a very busy place. There are 23 button factories where children ten years of age can earn their dollar and a half or two dollars a week and those of fifteen to eighteen can earn from three to seven dollars a week, so it is very hard for people to secure girls to do housework. The oatmeal factories also employ many boys and girls. A smart woman can earn three dollars a week at home sewing buttons on to cards.

The Library building is a magnificent structure, and they have just completed a large hospital. The electric street cars make my head swim, I really think there is too much civilization here to suit one who has lived in the quiet so long as I have. Freddie is delighted with all he sees and wants to see more. There has been so much rain here, corn is backward and oats are falling. On the whole corn looked better in Nebraska than in Iowa when I left home June 23, there were a few fields of very fine corn and some look as if it never would make any thing.

We intend to take a boat ride and cross the river on the bridge before we return home. The bridge is one hundred feet above the water.

I was sorry to learn that even a "baby cyclone" had visited our old neighbors, but glad it was no worse. Storms seem to be the order of the times. It is now July 10th and the rains continue, so we do not get to go around as much as we had intended. The Cedar river is so high we can't cross it now to go and visit the cemetery where my dear mother was laid to rest thirty seven years ago. I find the quiet resting places of the dead are under going changes as well as all others. Freddie finds so many relatives he has ceased to number them. He likes this country very well only the mud, and it is decidedly unpleasant about getting around. I feel the difference in the air very decidedly, it is harder work to breathe here than in Nebraska. I can still about Hurrah for Nebraska. CIO.
