Saw No Reason For Swearing.
 General Grant was asked why he never swore. He replied: "Well, when a boy I had an aversion to swearing. It seemed useless, an unnecessary habit, and besides I saw that swearing usually aroused a man's anger. I early had a desire to have complete command of myself. I noticed when a man got angry his opponent always got the better of him. On that account also I determined to refrain from swearing. Then the swearing men of my acquaintance when a boy were not the best men I knew. I never saw any reasons for swearing. All were against it."

Home Life in England and America.
 The decay of the home life is to be attributed partially to the influence on society of the invasion of America.
 In the United States home life is almost unknown. The meaning of the word "home" as understood to Brit-lishers, is a mystery to Yankees. To a certain extent we have always envied you your home life, and I certainly agree with some of your correspondents that it would be disastrous for your country to lose the elevating and refining influence of the home.—An Anglo-American in London Mail.

Duck Hooped We Hook.
 Former Lieutenant Diraizon of the French army announces that he has now given full satisfaction to all persons offended by his book "Les Martiennes," and will now devote himself to the advertising of his work. M. Diraizon's five ducks have hooped his beer, of which 80,000 copies have been sold, "which," remarks a facetious French correspondent, "is at the rate of 1600 per duck—good business."
