FIGS AND THISTLES.

A hot scolding never makes a warm heart.

Love never needs to be taught by duty.

A new hat does not make a new heart.

Better a dry sermon than one that evaporates before it can be applied.

There's no such thing as using God's way until you love God's way.

No human character can ripen or sweeten without the sunshine of love.

Some try to quench a man's thirst by throwing him into boiling water.

The height of fashion is usually the badge of the depth of cowardly folly.

The people with the opera cloaks won't have all the front seats in Heaven.

Many people who reside in hell got there by resting on the road to Heaven.

God never fails to open you a path though He may refuse you a philosophy.

The clouds may shut out to-day's sun, but they cannot hide yesterday's promises.

Many who fear to walk under a ladder have no hesitation in climbing all over the commandments of God.

It is hard to catch heavenly fruits when you are carrying earthly frets.

The flowers of sweet character bloom where the storms of trial have blown.

The peace that passes understanding comes from the passion that passes knowledge.

Many a man nails up his wounds at some sin and then lets the devil himself in the front door.

—The Rain's Horn.

Stock thieves have again become so numerous in this county that a deputy sheriff has been appointed to do nothing else but put in his time running them to justice. Between the wolves and thieves stockmen seem to be placed between the devil and the deep blue sea. It was thought at one time stock thief depredations were a thing of the past but recent developments have proven that such is not the case. "Eat 'em up Jake." —Lusk Herald.

There are people in the world who evidently think the whole native population ought to be waiting at their beck and call. They want to be everybody's pet and demand constant attention and assistance, without any thought of the inconvenience of others or of giving any return in kind, or in any other way, for what they receive. A good many young people start out with something of that idea, but most of them get it knocked out of them in a few rounds with the busy and more or less selfish world. They soon find that the partiality of parents and near friends, that blessed them in their childhood, does not reach beyond the home threshold and that people in general expect every one to pay full up for what he receives. Most of them see the point quite readily and govern themselves accordingly, asking what they reasonably may with the expectation of being called upon sooner or later for full payment. Occasionally however a person goes through a long life never learning this most important lesson. The result is they always think they are neglected and abused that the world is all wrong and unspeakable selfish and their lives are most unhappy and those who come in close contact with them are annoyed and rendered miserable. Do not expect the world to give you more than you give it. Indeed, try to keep the balance on the other side of the ledger, and you will save yourself and friends a good deal of trouble. —York Times.

How Shaw Writes His Plays. Sir Charles Wyndham recently told an interviewer of his first meeting with George Bernard Shaw. "In those days," he says, "Shaw would not have a bit of linen about him. He wore soft shirts and long, flowing ties, which, with his tawny hair and long, red beard, gave him the appearance of a veritable viking. Well, he came in and sat down at the table. Then he put his hand into his right trousers pocket and slowly drew out a small pocket memorandum book; then he dug into the left side pocket and brought out another. I waited. He thrust his hand into a coat pocket and fished out another of the little books, then still another and another. Finally he paused in his explorations, looked over at me and said: 'I suppose you're surprised to see all these little pocket books. The fact is, however, I write my plays in them while riding around London on top of a bus.'"

A Good Shot. "Is your friend a good shot?" "Yes," answered the sportsman, after some hesitation. "He never hits any game, but then he never hits any of the people in his hunting party either."

The Japanese Way. At Trinidad she made the acquaintance of a young Japanese prince, who today is no doubt fighting under Admiral Togo. Certainly he was learning his trade on board a German warship, for just read of his real: "One beautiful evening we were going to take tea on board this same German man-of-war, and I noticed on a launch which was sent to tow our own barge a grimy little figure working away at the miniature stoke hole. 'Who is that?' I asked. 'That! Oh, that's the prince, of course. He begged to be allowed to come and stoke for you. He wanted to learn just how that furnace went.'—From Lady Broomer's 'Colonial Memoirs.'"

Work. For every suffering of sense For sadder mental impotence, There is a certain recompense In work.

When Penury would Vision kill, Mid latitude of flesh or will, O keep this slogan ringing still, To work.

Thine enemies are all within— Deliverance must there begin— Arouse thee, Soul, and thou shalt win By work.

Thy triumph, from its final height, May cheer some comrade in his fight, Dispel his shadow—with the light Of work. —Ernest Neal Lyon in Pittsburg Chronicle.

Why He Wanted Time. Four year old Freddie had a visit the other day from his five year old cousin Walter, and the two small boys were playing marbles in Freddie's yard, when Freddie's mother called him to go to bed. The little fellow begged for just a minute more, and several times it was granted. Finally his mother became insistent, and the small boy came to her holding out a bag full of marbles. "Mother," he said, "if you will give me only a minute or two more I'll send him home busted, and you can have half the marbles."

Ancient Forks. A London jeweler has made a collection of ancient forks used in England which show some little known facts about the table manners of a few centuries ago. The forks, which are of solid silver, date from the sixteenth century. In many cases the designs in all this time have scarcely varied in any detail, and the forks look like those which might be bought today. The old forks were a great luxury in their time and were only used by the aristocracy.

Great Timber Waste. The annual consumption of the 203,132 miles of railroad track in this country is 114,000,000. Every year finds it harder for the railroads to get their supply. Granite, metal and concrete ties have been experimented with, but nowhere permanently adopted. In Europe the railroads have for a long time been treating their ties by various chemical processes, which have more than tripled their lives. The bureau of forestry at Washington has been conducting experiments along these lines for some time.

Photographs Wild Animals. The African explorer Shillings has brought to Berlin an extraordinarily interesting series of photographs of wild animals taken by themselves. His method was to attach to a piece of meat a string, which, on being touched, brought on a flashlight exposure. Leopards, hyenas, lions, apes, zebras and other animals were thus taken in the most diverse attitudes.

A Good Shot. "Is your friend a good shot?" "Yes," answered the sportsman, after some hesitation. "He never hits any game, but then he never hits any of the people in his hunting party either."
