FOUR ROUTE TO THE MOUNTAINS, LAKES and SEASHORE, street corners of an A A A A eastern city stood a girl playing a violin; the wild, sweet notes pierced the air and died away. and the girl held her chilled hands out to receive the pennies offered her. Then she walked on, only pausing to look through the brilliantly lighted shop windows at the rich furs.

For some moments she stood, then, drawing her old shawl closer, hurried on. Over the bridge she passed and up the dark street, entering one of the houses in a row of tenements. By the window sat a man, mending an old violin, while near him was a bench strewn with tools.

"Here, father," she said, coming over and throwing some pennies on the bench; "I stayed out until I was chilled through, and that is all I could get."

"You hussy! It's because you won't work that you can't get. You're as lazy and proud as your mother wasshe'd rather freeze to death than ask penny."

The girl stood by the stove, with one foot resting on the fender. It was her apparent indifference that aroused the anger of the man. He spread the money in his palm and counted it.

"Twenty cents, you good for nothing. How are we going to pay rent with that?"

The girl neither answered nor showed that she had heard. When she had partly dried her feet she went to the cupboard, and, bringing some brown bread and cheese, set them on the table. She then wheeled her father's chair to the board, and sat down to the cheerless supper. She broke off bits of bread and ate as though unconscious of what she was doing.

"Say, Sal," here the surly tone changed into a coaxing whine, "Bill Bradden was around today agin, and he says he'd be willing and glad to marry you. Now, Bradden's got money enough to take us both in, and a good home for your poor old-

The dark eyes slowly raised to hisgreat, glowing eyes, burning with rage and scorn.

"I'd starve before I would marry that Bill Bradden. I'd rather starve anyway than live out this-this-what is called life."

"We'll see, my girl," was the reply, spoken so quickly as to sound ominous. "You'll marry Bill Bradden or you'll leave home."

"Home!" and the girl laughed a miserable little laugh.

Nothing in the determined expression of the girl betrayed the agitation in her mind as she quietly rose and cleared away the dishes, piling the crust and bits of cheese in the bowl for their breakfast. Suddenly a figure passed the window. In an instant the girl had sprung to the door and bolted

A loud rap sounded. She went on putting away the supper things. The vigorous poundings continued.

Paul Oldfield sat reading before the fire in his little back parlor. The blaze lighted and shadowed the walls lined with books-old, musty books which had lain for years waiting to be claimed: the little room was oddly furnished in quaint pleces, also waiting to be claimed, for Paul Oldfield was a pawnbroker, as his father had been before him. The door opened, jingling the bell on its wire. The pawnbroker drew aside the chintz curtain and entered the shop. Before the counter stood Sal Garrick.

"You can sell my things," she said. "I can't redeem them, and you needn't save them any longer."

As she spoke she looked at a bracelet and a bunch of brown curls in the case.

"I can keep them a while longer, Miss Garrick. Just today a woman wanted the curls, but I told her the time was not up. If-if you could pay the interest-

"It's no use, Mr. Oldfield, I can't do it. Mother will know I tried to keep them, but could not."

"Anything I can do for you, Miss Garrick?"

"Well-yes. I don't suppose you ever loan money on people, do you?" The broker was surprised and puzzled.

"It is this," she went on. "I must have money enough to keep father from being turned out into the street. I can't make enough by playing to pay up the back rent, and-I thought I could pawn myself."

"Why, yes, I could loan money on you, although I have never done it before. How much do you need?"

"Twelve dollars. Oh! Mr. Oldfield, I will play on the streets night and day to pay you the interest and redeem myself.

"Take your time about paying it, Miss Garrick. I am not in a hurry," he said, making out the ticket, and handing it to her.

It was midnight when he locked the shop and put out the lights, after first taking a bracelet and a bunch of curls from the case and laying them carefully in a box. Sal Garrick grasped the money in one hand and her violin and bundle in the other, as she almost ran along the streets.

She had walked a long distance when she entered a lodging house and paid the price of a bed. The adjoining room was well filled with cots and Sal Garrick looked cautiously around at the sleepers before taking a paper from her pocket. It was a pawn ticket. By the light of the candle she read:

International Loan Office, November 12, 1893.

Number two hundred and five. Received the following goods, the person of Sal Garrick, who will be subject to conditions herein contained as security for twelve dollars, to be paid in one month from this date, with ten per cent per month addition for interest, and in default of payment thereof, the undersigned is authorized to sell the same at any public auction. Paul Oldfield, 6 Penn at.

"Number two hundred and five," she murmured. "Always the odd numbers. All my life I have been the odd one. The world didn't want me and has no place for me."

SENATE DISPOSES OF THE MATTER AT LAST.

All the Amendments Lost-The Silk Schedule Immediately Taken Up-

Efforts to Reduce Committee's Rates Rejected-A Little Tariff Wit.

Arranging the Tariff.

WASHINGTON, June 26.-In the Senate to-day Mr. Vest moved to strike out the specific rate on carpets in the wool schedule. The vote, 17 to 24, was four short of a quorum, but Mr. Vest insisted on a speedy announce-ment, remarking that the suffering country could not wait while Republicans mustered a quorum.

When the want of a quorum was announced Mr. Vest derisively said: 'And this, with the country just wallowing and dying while the bill waits. "The senator is out of order," interposed Mr. Chandler, jocularly.

"And so is the country," added Mr. Gray of Deiaware.

A call of the Senate brought fiftytwo Senators to the chamber and Mr. Vest's amendment was then rejected-21 to 26.

The consideration of the wool schedule was completed at 1 o'clock. Mr. Vest offered a number of amendments, but was defeated in each instance, the schedule being adopted as suggested by the finance committee.

The silk schedule was at once taken up and the Western and coast senators contended that the committee rates were "excessive, prohibitive and burdensome." They claimed the rates can from 70 to 700 per cent. Messrs. Jones, Vest, Mantle, White, Teller and Platt of Connecticut took part in the debate. The latter held that the government figures showed the rates to average 75 per cent. The efforts to reduce committee rates were rejected.

OTTAWA, Kan., June 26, - W. Bryan arrived here at 5 o'clock this morning over the Santa Fe from Cherryvale, where he addressed a large crowd at 2 o'clock. A terrific thunder storm began last evening and continued through the night, and when Bryan arrived the storm was furious. He was taken to the Centennial hotel, where he was the guest of L. C. Stine at breakfast. David Overmyer, ex-United States Senator John Martin and a number of local politicians were present. After breakfast Mr. Bryan was taken to the residence of Mr. Stine where, after a brief rest, an informal reception was held. At dinner Mr. Bryan, Governor Leedy and Senator Hugh P. Farrelly of Chanute were the guests of Senator H. F. Sheldon. Then the distinguished visitor was escorted to Forest park, where he addressed the Chautauquans and a vast assemblage of visitors at 1:30 o'clock on the "Political Character of Governmental Conditions." He left at 5 p. m. for Beatrice, Neb., where he expects to meet his wife.

"Adirond ses,"

The word "Adirondack" is derived from the Indian Ha-de-ron-dack (meaning wood eaters), and applied in derision to the remnant of a oncepowerful tribe of Algonquins, who were defeated in war by the Iroquois and forced to seek refuge in the New York wilderness, living for weeks upon the bark and roots of trees. and finally ending their existence here. The name was first given to the several ranges and mountains and finally adopted for the wilderness as well.

at which the man stood peeping in, went upstairs. She listened at the pipe hole and heard her father open the door to admit the visitor.

"That girl of yours is a rare one. The minute she sees me coming she runs and bolts the door in my face. 1 doesn't look very encouraging, ch. Garrick?"

"Just you have patience, Bradden. The girl's got to have some of the stubbornness knocked out of her, that's all. But say, old fellow, about the cash. It's agreed and written down in black and blue that you are to hand it over the night you marry her?"

"That's a bargain. The girl's a prize and I'm willing to pay well for her. Clip her wings, Garrick, that it will be straight sailing."

"Let me see-this is the twelfth. Three days more and then-Say, Bradden, what do you say to doing the thing up tomorrow night? She will be just as willing then as she will be a year from now. Shall we go shead?" Then they laughed together and shook hands. Sal strained her ears, but could hear nothing more than the clink of glasses.

She heard the door open and Bill Bradden go out. Creeping noiselessly down the stairs, she laid the bundle [far,"-New York Weekly, down and put on her bonnet and shawl then walked over and looked long at the unconscious face of her father as he lay in a heavy stupor in his chair, with his head fallen on his breast.

"I have done the best I could by you father, I have tried and failed. I won't atay and be made to marry that man. No! not even to save the root over your head!"

The girl opened the window a triffe. picked up her bundle and violin, and owing out the light left the house.

watching the bright coals and thinking, thinking, always thinking.

Just then the bell tinkled. He went into the shop and found Sal Garrick gazing intently into the case.

"You have sold them, then?" Her voice trembled in spite of her effort to hide her disappointment.

"Miss Garrick, I couldn't-

"Mr. Oldfield," she interrupted, "the loan is due-overdue. I have sent the little I could pick up to father, and there is none left for interest. Take this-take it!" she demanded, shoving the violin on the counter. I won't need it any more."

The broker started as he saw the expression in her eyes-wild, desperate, determined. He took the girl's hand and drew her toward him.

"The loan is up," he said, slowly. "In default of payment thereof the broker is authorized to take into possession that which is deposited, to protect and love as he has never loved in all his empty, lonely life. Sal, will you marry me?"

She thrust the pawn ticket in his hand.

"It's the odd number that's not redeemed-take it," she said, wearily, and Paul Oldfield kissed her beautiful upturned face and held her in his arms, saying "Mine-my own-own by consent and right of law."

Strikers Will Cause Longest Period of Inactivity Yet Known.

CHICAGO, June 26 .- All the manufactories of window and flint glass, together with 95 per cent of the green glass establishments in the country, will shut down at midnight next Wednesday, and it is not unlikely that they may remain closed for the longest period in the history of the industry.

The window glass blowers and gatherers have called a mass meeting to be held in Cleveland, July 6. They will then formulate their demands, which will be for wage advances of not less than 15 per cent, and many manufacturers believe they will reach 25 per cent.

Jobbers in this city, which is one of the largest distributing points for glass, say manufacturers with whom they communicate are to a man determined not to grant any large advance in wages, and that the result will be a suspension of the industry until snow
