THE HEN.

The hen is not an animal, Nor fish, and doesn't sing: It's just a feathered sort of bird And yells like everything. Whene'er it chances for to lay An egg in any place, Just cackles round and up and down And never cracks its face.

And when it wants a family It doubles up its legs And sets on anything in reach, Woodpiles, or stones, or eggs. One time a hen set on an axe, Her pride!-no hen could match it! But finally her poor heart broke Because she couldn't hatchet.

All children should be good to hens, Till goodness is a habit. No other thing lays eggs for them Except the Easter rabbit: A rooster is a man hen, but-This between me and you-The hen climbs on a roost to sleep, So it's a rooster, too. -J. M. Lewis in Houston Post.

Johnny's Saving Bank.

Our son Johnny has taken a great fancy to poultry, and he calls his lit tle flock his savings bank. He bought a hen and rooster with the pennies he saved and since that purchase, two years ago, he has been investing about all of his extra pennies in more hens. Hens have been selling at thirty-five cents in the vicinity for years, and every time he gets that amount of money a new hen comes to the farm. Incidentally I might mention that Johnny has an uncle whom he has interested in his sav ings bank, and from him he succeeds in getting many a dime for errands run. I have a strong suspicion that the said uncle has more errands to do than he really need have, as he has a strong leaning towards Johnny They have cured anaemia, and all forms The surprising thing is that Johnny's flock has now grown to be
